No Mass 'Dewinging' But New Rules Could Mean 3,000 Proficiency Drop

THE Pentagon has launched a program to slash the cost of proficiency flying without resorting to any mass "dewinging."

At present, some 25,000 members of the Air Force, Navy, Marine Corps, and Army are participating in proficiency flying.

When the Pentagon's new policy is fully operative, it is anticipated that this figure may drop by about 3,000.

However, Defense Department experts emphasize that this does not mean that 3,000 fliers will lose flight pay.

Normal attrition, such as separations from active duty and retirements, will account for a good part of the decrease.

Some rated officers now on proficiency flying will be shifted from administrative flying assignments. Input of rated officers can be expected to decline.

The Pentagon anticipates that the new policy will mean a saving in proficiency flying costs of from $40-$50 million out of a total present expenditure for proficiency flying of $225 million per year. Most of the savings will come from

General Taylor Says Top-Heavy Strategic Force Calls For All-Service Reappraisal

CNO BURKE CAUTIONS

"As far as the Navy budget is concerned by itself," Admiral Arleigh Burke told the House Appropriations Subcommittee, "we will be able to perform our mission during the fiscal year 1960."

"It is not the fiscal year 1960 that I am so much concerned with," the CNO added, "although we are very tight that year. It is the future, beyond that a little bit, because it takes a long time to build ships."

"If most of our ships become obsolete all at once, as they will do because they were all built in a relatively short time period in WW II, we shall be in a very sad state along about 1965 and 1966."

"At that time we may not be able to carry out our mission unless something is done in the next few years."

IN what may prove to be his major departing statement as Army Chief of Staff, General Maxwell D. Taylor has told Congress he believes the United States has more "strategic weapons and weapon systems" than it needs.

These include, he said, "the aggregate of bombers of the Air Force, of the Navy, and of our overseas commands and our allies," as well as "the ICBM's and IRBM's that are coming along in the hands of the Air Force."

Although there is a need for "hundreds" of such delivery vehicles, he declared, "We presently have thousands."

General Taylor said "the time has come to reappraise our Service programs" and to develop a new military budget pattern which places greater emphasis on the combined contribution of all of the Armed Services.

His views expressed in testimony taken behind closed doors and released 30 March by the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, were backed firmly by Secretary of the Army Wilber M. Brucker who also urged "a completely new concept" for determining budget requirements.

Air Force Joins Army And Navy To Pay Eight Cents A Mile For Local Auto Travel

The Air Force within the next few weeks will bring its rates for use of privately-owned vehicles on local official business to eight cents per mile—the same as the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps.

At present, the official rate of compensation for Air Force personnel who use their own cars for official travel in or adjacent to their permanent or temporary duty station is seven cents a mile.

Civilian employees of all Services receive the same rate. Authority for the Air Force change was granted by the Department of Defense

DoD Defers Action On DentiCare; Will Await Dental Assn. Approval

(Leave MediCare Alone, Page 28)

A DENTICARE program for military families is dead for this year.

Legislation to establish the program will not be sent to Congress, according to Dr. Frank B. Berry, Assistant Secretary of Defense, Health and Medical.

In an interview with THE JOURNAL, Dr. Berry indicated that the Defense Department was going to defer dental care proposals until approval of a plan is obtained from the American Dental Association.

The Association, which had originally helped to formulate recommendations for Family Dental Care legislation, refused final approval of the program at a meeting of its House of Delegates in Dallas, last November.

Renewed consideration by the ADA Delegates is expected this September in New York.

Dr. Berry noted that the type of bill to be recommended by his office would not necessarily be the same as that which may be recommended by the Dental Association.

He said that his final DentiCare proposal would probably follow the recommendation of the ADA.

SecDef Hits "Onerous Restrictions" Imposed On Retired Officers In Industry

SECRETARY McElroy has come to the defense of retired officers employed by firms doing business with the military.

The Secretary also revealed that the Pentagon is working on a new conflict-of-interests directive.

During testimony before the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, released 30 March, Representative Keith Thomson (R-Wyo.) wanted to know how Secretary McElroy could "expect unbiased and purely honest judgment to be exercised by a military officer representing a Service procurement agency when the concern to which he is assigned numbers among its officialdom a retired senior officer who is in frequent communication with the superiors of the active officer"

GEN. WHITE "SATISFIED"

General Thomas D. White has answered "right, sir," to the question of Chairman George H. Mahon (D-Tex.) of the House Military Appropriations Committee as to whether "you are reasonably satisfied with the adequacy of the budget . . . from the standpoint of the Air Force?"

Asked to comment on reductions that were made in the Air Force budget requests by the Administration, Chief of Staff White replied:

"If I didn't think they (the final budget figures) were adequate, or thought that they seriously affected the security, I would not be here justifying the budget."

"Obviously, there are some of these programs that I personally would have liked to see remain in. I would certainly class them as desirable but not vital."

From Airlift To Zeus, Here Are Some Highlights From FY '60 Budget Testimony

THE newly released House testimony by top military leaders on the fiscal '60 budget covered a wide range of topics, as shown in these salient excerpts:

AIR LIFT—General Twining says the Joint Chiefs have made 18 airlift studies in the past 12 months and have concluded that additional airlift "is not necessary." He said four out of five members of the JCS are agreed that present airlift is adequate for limited war and all agree that it is "generally adequate" for global conflict.

NIKE-ZEUS—When the Nike-Zeus anti-missile missile is completed, Army Secretary Brucker says he has "every reason to believe that the Army will be designated to operate it."

THE NATO RIFLE—If the fiscal '60 production rate for the new M-14 rifle (120,000 per year) is continued in future years, General Taylor says "our forces in Europe will be equipped with the new rifle by fiscal '62, the Strategic Army Corps by 1964 and the entire Regular Army by 1968."

MODERN SOVIET ARMY—General Taylor reports the Army of the USSR has "on the average approximately five times as much modern equipment as the United States Army"; Soviet conventional artillery is "superior" to that of the U. S., and the Russians have "far more" medium and heavy gun tanks than the U. S., and of "about the same quality."

JCS INCREASE—In the five-month period immediately following enactment of the Pentagon Reorganization Act last August, the Pentagon added 271 officers, enlisted members and civilians to the JCS structure. Biggest group (221) was assigned to the Joint Staff. Forty-four were added to the Joint Secretariat, three to JCS boards and agencies, and three to the office of the JCS Chairman.

MARINE UNIT ROTATION—General Pate relates that the Marines have adopted the Army system of Gyroscopic unit rotation. Infantry battalions will be rotated between the 1st Marine Division on the west coast and the 3d Marine Division on Okinawa.

LIVING CONDITIONS ON OKINAWA—The Marine Commandant says that he will continue to place priority on the improvement of living conditions for Marines on Okinawa. He comments that 4,000 of the 15,000 men stationed there are in permanent facilities; an additional 5,000 should be under permanent construction by this June, and authority has been received to proceed with permanent construction for a new camp which should provide permanent facilities for the remainder by early 1961.

NEED FOR NAVY SHIPS—Admiral Burke thinks the Navy, in the fiscal '60 budget, has "been unable to explain satisfactorily the really urgent need for new ships and new aircraft and missiles." What the Navy would "reasonably" like to have "is about 35 ships per year, at that means about $2.5 billion worth of shipbuilding" annually. Because of the "urgent need for numbers of ships," the Navy would not, however, "try to get a carrier each year," the CNO adds.

NUCLEAR-CARRIER COST—The Navy's nuclear-powered aircraft carrier USS Enterprise, could cost more than $400 million. Navy Secretary Gates reports "the funds are unpredictable." The cost of the light reactor nuclear power plant originally was estimated at $70-$80 million, then at $90 million. "Now we estimate it at $120 million," according to Secretary Gates. "We really don't know what it is at this point because the construction of the Enterprise is not far enough along to prove what we are really talking about. This brings the cost of the total package up to $400 million as presently estimated, so we may be talking about higher costs than that."

SOVIET BOMBER FORCE—Secretary Douglas says there has been a change in the intelligence estimate with respect to the Soviet bomber force. "Perhaps two years ago we were inclined to accept an estimate that provided for a substantial buildup of Soviet manned bombers—the Bison and Bear models," he reports. "Apparently, the Soviet plans were reversed in that regard." New evidence indicates, that the Soviets now "have" (deleted) operational Bisons in units of some (deleted), and I believe that is the exact number, Bears in operational units so that their true intercontinental bomber force is considerably less than earlier estimates." General White adds that the Russians are still producing the Badger, which corresponds to the Force B-47, and emphasizes "We stopped producing B-47's two years ago."

ANTI-MISSILE MISSILE DOUBTS—General White says he, personally, has "very grave doubt we are anywhere near acquiring an adequate active defense against ballistic missiles. It is a problem that is vital and we must know after it. I am not a scientist, but to shoot down a warhead, so big around (deleted) coming through at the speed of a meteor until it hits the earth's atmosphere and then begins to slow down a bit, will be extremely difficult. But we have to keep trying."

HYDROFOIL SUB-CHASER—Admiral Burke discloses that the high-speed hydrofoil sub-chaser authorized by the House (THE JOURNAL 28 March) will be capable of 45 knots. The new vessel will be used to explore both the hydrofoil hull design and "an entirely new concept of sonar employment."

The low-down on low-level missions

Let them hide that target in a deep gorge... surround it with jagged peaks... shroud it with fog. A plane with an Autonetics monopulse radar system—like Republic's F-105—can find it at will... day or night, rain or snow.

Lightweight, compact NASARR is the only system in production that is equally effective for air search, automatic tracking, air-to-ground slant ranging, and terrain avoidance—from sea level to stratosphere. Accurate ground mapping rounds out NASARR's uncanny versatility.

Autonetics builds NASARR for the AN/ASG-19 armament control system—standard equipment for advanced versions of the F-105. Like all Autonetics guidance and control systems, NASARR does its delicate work reliably under extremes of speed, altitude, and temperature.

NASARR is one example of the type of system that is resulting from Autonetics' decade of development in monopulse radar.

THE PROPHETIC CONGRESSMAN FLOOD

On 30 January, last day of the closed-door Army hearings before the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, Representative Daniel J. Flood (D-Pa) commented on the testimony of Army Chief of Staff General Maxwell D. Taylor, and made this prediction:

"Your integrity and honesty before this committee will cost the United States of America and the free world and our Army a great general. Every officer, Army, Navy and Air, who has exhibited the integrity and the honesty that this man has exhibited before this committee, never lasted the year."

Congressman Flood told his colleagues, "This man will be retired before you adjourn."

On 18 March, President Eisenhower nominated a new Army Chief of Staff, after General Taylor made known his desire to retire 30 June.

The following exchange between Representative Flood and General Thomas D. White, Chief of Staff of the Air Force, took place during House Appropriations Committee hearings in February.

Mr. Flood—Didn't anybody ask, "General, what do you think about the Navy's request for (a) a conventional carrier, (b) a nuclear carrier?"

General White—I think I have to reply in the negative on that. The Joint Chiefs of Staff never were asked that question unless my memory fails me.

Mr. Flood—Don't you think they should have been asked that by somebody?

General White—I think what the Secretary of Defense asks the Joint Chiefs of Staff is his decision.

Mr. Flood—Dear, dear, dear; you'll be around a long time.

General White's reappointment was announced 18 March.

ARMY MOVES TOWARD TWO BASIC DIVISIONS

The Army is moving "Slowly but surely, toward two basic fighting divisions: Airborne and Mechanized Armor," Maj. Gen. Louis V. Hightower has told a Reserve Officers Association luncheon meeting at Ft. Belvoir, Va.

General Hightower, Senior Army Representative on the Department of Defense Weapons Systems Evaluation Group, said the United States must look forward to tremendous mobility, exceptional overall firepower, operations over long distances and more firepower within small groups of fighting men.

Chairman Mahon Would Like JCS To "Slug It Out" On Weapons

CHAIRMAN George H. Mahon (D-Tex.) of the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee thinks the United States "deserves a better setup" than the current JCS structure.

After listening to testimony that the Joint Chiefs do not consider individual Service weapons "as basic and as big as aircraft carriers," Chairman Mahon said:

"This country deserves a better setup and a better organization."

Later, he said he feels that the Joint Chiefs, "while they are made up of good people who have good intentions, do not really slug it out with bare knuckles in calculating what the requirements are."

He told General Thomas D. White, Chief of Staff of the Air Force: "Often you do not even discuss how many wings we need to provide for in a given year, I am told. You do not even take the time to discuss whether or not you would include a nuclear or conventional type carrier. You do not go into any budget for a given year, and you do not go into detail as to whether or not you ought to have 14 or 15 divisions in the Army or perhaps 25 divisions in the Army."

Chairman Mahon said: "I am rather of the opinion that the Joint Chiefs are not the advisory group that the Nation expects."

General White said he has always felt "that the Joint Chiefs of Staff should spend more of their time on Joint Chiefs of Staff business," and added that he hopes the Pentagon reorganization bill will accomplish this objective.

General Maxwell D. Taylor, Army Chief of Staff, previously had testified that the Chiefs have never been able to reach accord on the necessary force levels needed to carry out their agreed-upon strategic objectives.

Stars On The Move

1. Gen. Clyde D. Eddleman, former Seventh Army Commander, promoted to four-star rank, has taken command of U.S. Army Europe, succeeding General Henry I. Hodes, who retired 31 March.

General Hodes was tendered unprecedented honors by the German Army, which staged a torchlight parade for him in Heidelberg.

Admiral Robert L. Dennison, formerly Deputy CNO (Plans and Policy), has taken command of U.S. Naval Forces in the Eastern Atlantic and Mediterranean. He replaces Admiral James L. Holloway, Jr., USN. Among those present at change-of-command ceremonies in London was Earl Mountbatten, the British First Sea Lord.

General Lyman L. Lemnitzer, Army Vice Chief of Staff who will succeed General Maxwell D. Taylor, left this week on an inspection trip to the Far East.

Brig. Gen. Edgar C. Doleman, Deputy Commandant of the Army War College, Carlisle Barracks, Pa., reports to the U. S. Army Pacific, Hawaii, in July.

Brig. Gen. Philip F. Kromer, Jr., Engineer of USARPAC, Hawaii, takes command of the Engineer Maintenance Center, Columbus, Ohio, in September. He succeeds Brig. Gen. Bruce D. Rindlaub, who died last month. Brig. Gen. David

W. Helman, Assistant Chief of Army Engineers for Military Supply, Washington, D. C., relieves General Kromer in August.

Col. Swancutt Named SAC Safety Chief

Col. Woodrow P. Swancutt, Commander of the 376th Bombardment Wing at Lockbourne AFB, Ohio, has been reassigned to SAC Headquarters at Offutt AFB, Neb., as Chief of Safety.

A command pilot with more than 6,000 flying hours to his credit, Colonel Swancutt served in the China-Burma-India Theater of Operations during WWII and participated in 49 bombing missions in B-29 Superforts.

He commanded the air crew which dropped the Atomic Bomb in the Bikini tests of 1946.

Later, Colonel Swancutt served as Director of Operations for the Seventh Air Division in England and Commander of the 42d Bombardment Wing at Loring AFB, Maine, before going to Lockbourne AFB.

Colonel Swancutt is married to the former Jean Haza of Wisconsin Rapids, Wis. They have three children, Gwendolyn Jean, Carolyn Jean and Woodrow P, Jr.

Air Alert Could Cost More Than $1 Billion; None Maintained Or Needed At Present

An effective airborne alert could cost the nation as much as $1.1 billion, General Thomas D. White has told Congress.

The Air Force Chief of Staff said no air alert currently is maintained or needed.

In testimony made public by the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee on 30 March, General White said the Air Force has "conducted experiments with the airborne alert in order to gain know-how and to be able to measure what the probable costs will be for the future," but has not maintained an air alert because "the enemy does not have an ICBM capability now, nor are they expected to have a significant one within the next year or two; so the threat is primarily an aircraft threat."

He said the distant early warning line, the Pine Tree and mid-Canada line, plus local radars, "give us sufficient time to give us warning of two to six hours at the most remote SAC bases from the farthest distant warning site, which is ample time to permit the bombers to get off, from a ground alert."

General White said the Air Force in-

ALERT PAY

There is no question that if a decision is made to inaugurate an airborne alert, General Thomas S. Power, CinC of SAC, will renew his request for special pay recognition to SAC aircrews.

He has told Congress that alert pay should be authorized.

An airborne alert would mean, of course, a necessity to beef up the aircrew strength of SAC.

Whether this could be achieved within the Air Force's curtailed manpower strength—the Air Force alone of the Services will sustain a manpower loss in fiscal '60—is highly questionable.

tends "to conduct further tests with the airborne alert provided we get the authority to do so," and, on the basis of "three further tests we may or may not recommend that we go on a continuous airborne alert."

No Mass "Dewinging" Seen, But Rules Could Drop 3,000 From Proficiency Pay

curtailed proficiency flying hours, with consequent reductions in expenses for fuel, maintenance, etc.

The policy will mean, however, that there will be some "dewinging" actions.

The Air Force in fiscal '58, it is recalled, took 1,125 officers off flying status, with an estimated cut of 390 this fiscal year.

The other Services will be under strong pressure to duplicate the Air Force's annual screening.

In the long run, the largest reduction in proficiency flying will come from the requirement that the Services conduct an annual review and validation of requirements for flying officers and assignment of these officers to positions where their aeronautical skills and knowledge will be more effectively employed.

With the increased utilization of missiles, it is anticipated that the need for new rated officers will decrease.

Significantly, the Air Force during fiscal '58 lost, by all causes, about 8,000 rated officers, but added only about 4,000.

A second part of the Pentagon's four-point policy will see a decline in total flying activity "by crediting administrative and support flying against flying hour maximums and minimums."

It is estimated that about 60% of proficiency flying is related to performance of administrative and logistical support activities.

At present, proficiency pilots log from 100 to 400 flying hours per year.

A qualitative screening, prescribed in the new policy, is expected to mean some additional reductions.

The fourth point, which directs the Services to carry out Congressional authorization for awarding flight pay to certain officers who have held aeronautical ratings for at least 20 years, also will reduce total proficiency flying.

Congress provided such authority beginning in 1954, but it has not been used to date.

The new Pentagon proficiency flying policy is an outgrowth of a study made under the supervision of Assistant Secretary (Manpower, Personnel & Reserve) Charles C. Finucane.

This study was motivated by Congressional criticism of the proficiency flying program.

Text Of Pentagon Flight Pay Statement

The following is the text of the Defense Department's 31 March statement on proficiency flying:

NEW policies governing the administration of proficiency flying by members of the Armed Forces were announced today by the Department of Defense.

Proficiency flying is defined as that flying performed by pilots, navigators, and other aircrew personnel who need to fly frequently to maintain their basic flying skill where their current duty assignment does not normally allow them enough flying in tactical operations to maintain these skills.

The policies announced today recognize the importance of proficiency flying as necessary to maintain the expensively acquired aircrew skills. However, the Department of Defense has directed that the proficiency program be closely controlled to insure that the Services get the maximum effectiveness for each dollar expended.

This has been done by a four-point action program which provides for:

A. An annual review and validation of requirements for flying officers and the assignment of these officers to positions where their aeronautical skills and knowledge will be more effectively employed.

B. Establishment by the military

Services of procedures and controls designed to reduce total flying activity by crediting administrative and support flying against flying hour maximums and minimums.

C. An annual screening, identification, and removal from active flying status of personnel who can no longer be expected to fill positions requiring a rated officer—the identification to be by age, grade, military occupational specialty, flying experience, and future potential.

D. Selected individuals who have held aeronautical ratings for more than 20 years are permitted, under the terms of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, to receive flight pay without the necessity of proficiency flying.

The new policies direct the military Services to carry out this provision of the Appropriations Act except for individuals whose current duties require flying.

Regulations, instructions, and policies of the military Services will be revised to conform to the new policies which resulted from a study conducted by the Office of the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Manpower, Personnel & Reserve).

The policies announced today are effective immediately. Implementing regulations of military Services will become effective upon approval of the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

Army Nears End Of Lieutenant Colonel List

The Army has announced in S.O. 59, effective 25 March, the promotion of 26 majors to temporary lieutenant colonel, including seven members of the WAC. The cutoff date was 10 August 1951.

Army officials said that there are 97 majors remaining on the recommended list for advancement, after which promotions will begin from the selection list of 1194 basic zone and 125 "highly outstanding" officers recently named by a selection board (the list was published in the 21 March 1959 issue of THE JOURNAL). The prior list is expected to be exhausted in April or May.

the defense budget, the overall adequacy of which I support.

But as to the internal composition of the defense budget, I find programs being funded in a manner which to me appears sometimes excessive to military requirements. Similarly, I have reservations about the adequacy of the funding of other programs. Among the latter, I would list the Army programs for modernization, for the anti-missile missile, the Nike-Zeus program, for personnel—both active and reserve—and for antibomber and anti-air-to-surface missile defense.

I am of the opinion that the time has come to reappraise our Service programs in the light of changed world conditions, and to recognize there are changed strategic requirements that call for corresponding changes in the pattern of the military budget.

"This suggestion does not necessarily imply a need for increased total budgets. It does suggest the need to determine how much is enough in all categories of our military forces and then to adjust the budget to these determinations.

Chairman George H. Mahon (D-Tex.)—You made reference to some programs overfunded. Will you be specific with respect to those?

General Taylor—I am expressing my personal views.

Mr. Mahon—Oh, yes.

General Taylor—I assure you many qualified experts do not agree with me. I consider that we have an excess number of strategic weapons and weapon systems in the atomic retaliatory force.

Mr. Mahon—For example.

General Taylor—I refer to the aggregate of bombers of the Air Force, of the Navy, and of our overseas commands and our allies; of the ICBM's and the IRBM's that are coming along in the hands of the Air Force. I see in the future the Polaris system, a very promising system, coming forward. When I add together all those vehicles capable of delivering the atomic retaliatory attack, in my judgment the aggregate is excessive to the requirements.

Mr. Mahon—It is overwhelming. It is more than sufficient?

General Taylor—That is correct. . . .

Mr. Mahon—Have you thoroughly considered these statements you have made, and are you satisfied in your own mind and morally certain in your personal opinion that we are overdoing the strategic strike program?

General Taylor—Yes. I have studied this matter for 3½ years and that is my considered opinion. . . .

On Possible Weaknesses:

Mr. Mahon—You would to some extent operate on the basis that we have in being, or in the plans, excess strategic striking power. Where are some other possible weaknesses?

General Taylor—I think that we have been slow in cutting back on fighter interceptor aircraft. We are depending, or have been depending too long, on manned aircraft as a general thing. I am not saying that there is no utility in them at this time, but looking down the road I would say that we are getting out of the business of manned aircraft too slowly.

I think in continental air defense that the concept of area defense in great depth, calling for long-range interceptor type missiles, has not been proved feasible, in my judgment, either technically or economically. It may turn out differently as we go down the road, but I am not convinced now.

Mr. Mahon—Are you speaking of the Bomarc system?

General Taylor—The Bomarc-Sage-interceptor type of defense over large areas. . . .

Mr. Mahon—Would you take the awesome responsibility of deemphasizing that part of the program in a marked way?

General Taylor—I would first be sure . . . that the heart of America is amply protected by dense defenses and what is left over I would use to push out the defense in depth as far as the resources would permit.

Mr. Mahon—Would you put your reliance for more certain security on the more or less so-called point defense idea?

General Taylor—Yes; but meaning large urban and strategic complexes. . . .

On Horizontal View:

Mr. Mahon—I go back to other weaknesses in our setup and in our plans as seen by you personally, General.

General Taylor—As a general statement, Mr. Chairman, I think that our weakness is in not determining standards of sufficiency—how much is enough for the atomic retaliatory force, for air defense, for limited warfare forces, for strategic airlift and sealift, for Reserve-type forces—all of those categories to which several services contribute. We never look at the problem horizontally and determine whether each function is properly supported by the appropriate forces of all contributing services.

Mr. Mahon—Will the Reorganization Act of last year help us along that line?

General Taylor—I do not think it will help or hinder. Rather, it would require a changed approach to budget-making and toward the examination of our forces such as that which this committee, for example, makes each year. . . .

Mr. Mahon—As to the sufficiency of our planning, we have discussed the strategic attack capability and the defense capability from the standpoint of so-called area defense. Are there other areas in which you think we may have been inaccurate?

Army Hopes Civilian-Published Almanac Will Gain Wider Use Than GPO Version

The Stackpole Publishing Company of Harrisburg, Pa., formerly The Military Service Publishing Company, with the help of an Army project officer, has published "The Army Almanac," formerly put out by the Government Printing Office.

The cost of the new 797-page volume is $8.95. The prior Government Printing Office volume of 1009 pages, printed in 1950, cost $3.00.

The Army, in arranging for the publication of the "Almanac" by the well-known Harrisburg firm, was motivated by the hope that under civilian auspices it would be more available and more valuable to the public.

The volume reportedly paid for itself when sold by the Government Printing Office.

The Army collected the material for the new volume and furnished it to the publisher in "raw" form.

The Army had intended to purchase about 3100 copies of the "Almanac" for each general officer, school, MAAG, embassy, major Regular, Reserve and National Guard troop units, ROTC units, Public Information Officers, etc.

The Army would have paid about 50% of the retail cost for the 3100 copies.

However, the Comptroller has not approved the expenditure.

As a consequence, units and individuals must buy the "Almanac" individually, with 538 copies being procured by the Army Library System.

It is anticipated that a new volume will be published every two years.

Brig. Gen. Gordon R. Young, USA-Ret., is the editor of "The Army Almanac."

A publisher's foreword notes that the new volume has broadened the scope of its predecessor. "Current information has been revised and brought up to date. Historical data have been condensed where appropriate and expanded as necessary for adequate perspective.

"Particular care has been taken by the Army and all other agencies concerned," the forward adds, "to verify the accuracy of the facts presented.

Army officials explained further that after WWII, availability of welfare funds and personnel resources made it possible for the Army to prepare and publish the Almanac.

In the absence of money and manpower, it was decided to turn the project over to a civilian publishing firm for the revised version, it was stated.

On Strategic Reserves:

General Taylor—I do not like, in my own testimony, to point a finger only at forces provided by the Air Force and Navy. I say all the forces including those of the Army, should be looked at very rigorously from the point of view of sufficiency or excessiveness. I would consider the strategic reserves of the Air Force, the Army, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, which represent our forces for limited war, and decide: Are they sufficient, are they excessive? Then the next category of forces would be those necessary for strategic sea and air movement, to include the antisubmarine warfare forces of the Navy. Here again we would have to determine: Do we have the proper forces to keep the sealanes open in general war and to provide rapid strategic movement of military forces in general or limited war?

Finally, we should look at our civilian reserve force structure. Is it logical? Does it support the mobilization requirements? Have the National Guard and the Reserve units of all services a legitimate and necessary role to play?

Mr. Mahon—Have we done that?

General Taylor—We generally do it, sir, vertically, as I have indicated before. For example, we look at the Army components right down the list, but we do not look across horizontally at the contribution made by the other Services to the same functions. Hence, I come to you as Chief of Staff of the Army and defend an Army need because I see the Army picture clearly. But our method of doing business, setting up the budget in three vertical service columns prevents this horizontal look at functions, and matching those functions with the forces which will be available in all three services. . . .

Mr. Mahon—Will you elaborate the idea which you have just expressed?

General Taylor—What I am undertaking to say, Mr. Chairman, is that the meaningful way of looking at our Armed Services, the fighting forces of all three Services, is not to look first at the Army from top to bottom, then the Navy, then the Air Force; but rather, is to consider the military functions which the various components of these Services must perform. I would list about five or six of those functions for which we must provide forces.

On Air Atomic Retaliatory Force:

The first category is the air atomic retaliatory force. If you listed the forces in this category, you would have SAC as the biggest component. Then you would have a Naval element represented by the heavy bombers of the carriers. Later you would have the Navy Polaris submarine forces. You will have a small Army contribution represented by our Redstone missiles and later by our Pershing missiles. This first category is largely contributed by the Air Force and Navy.

On Continental Air Defense:

The second category of forces you would look at would be continental air defense forces. There you would go out and see what General Partridge at Colorado Springs, NORAD, has and what he needs. He needs at the present time an Air Force contribution of aircraft. He needs an Army contribution of surface-to-air missiles.

You would look at what the Navy can provide around some of our ports. That is the next category which needs to be looked at from the viewpoint of requirements and sufficiency.

On Overseas Deployments:

Third, you would look at our overseas deployments, which are a part of our general war deterrent force, and see if we are making an ample contribution in Europe. If we are making an ample contribution in the Far East, to hold firmly those key strategic areas.

On General Strategic Reserve Forces:

Fourth, you would look at the general strategic reserve forces. What do we have free, uncommitted, ready for an emergency? Generally those forces are the divisions of the Army and the Marines in the United States, some of the tactical air forces, some of the naval carrier forces, and particularly the strategic air and sealift.

Is that force or that group of forces sufficient (1) to move rapidly into a general war to reinforce our deployment overseas or (2) to react in time in a limited war situation which might arise anywhere? It certainly should be looked at carefully particularly the strategic airlift provided by the Air Force. Of course, the Army is tremendously interested in that component.

On ASW Program And Reserves:

Fifth, I would look at the question of the security of the sealanes and air communications. The most important aspect there is the Navy's antisubmarine warfare problem, a very tough one.

The final category of operational forces would be our reserves. What happens after M-day? Do we have enough reserves in terms of trained manpower and units? Do we have the individuals to replace our casualties? Do we have the supplies to maintain combat? In other words, how do our mobilization base and reserve strength stack up against our requirements?

On How Much Is Enough?

The basic question in all cases is to decide how much is enough. What are we shooting for? What is the level which we are aiming at? Having once determined that, it becomes pretty much a technical semimechanical procedure for the military experts to translate objectives into dollars.

Army Issues Policy On Arctic Credit

Army enlisted personnel who perform 90-day TDY assignments two years in a row in Arctic operations in Greenland or in support of the DEW-LINE will be credited with completion of a normal overseas tour in a short tour area.

The Army said: "This action is in recognition of hardships involved in the operations and of the fact that personnel engaged are away from their families for extended periods each year."

Affected are the Engineer Arctic Task Force which operates in Greenland each summer and Transportation Corps Resupply Operations each summer in support of DEW-LINE.

RECORD FINANCE SCHOOL ENROLLMENT SEEN

A RECORD-BREAKING peacetime resident enrollment is expected at the Army Finance School during the fiscal year starting 1 July. Col. A. C. Small, Assistant Commandant and Director of Training, says student registration figures will approach the 4,500 mark.

Major training effort is being programmed in the enlisted instruction area with some 2,200 enlisted personnel anticipated for the revised six-week basic finance procedures course. This will almost double current annual figures. The first class is slated to start 6 July. During fiscal year 1960 the Army Finance School again will offer 83 resident courses in career and specialist finance and financial management fields.

In the area of officer education, the Finance School staff officials have scheduled the following: one nine-month long Finance Officer Advanced Class, six three-month Finance Officer Basic Classes, one Finance Officer Refresher Class, one Financial Management Mobilization Designees Class and one Finance Officer Orientation Class.

Marines Must Cut 9,000 Combat Troops; Six Squadrons Under Manpower Cutback

Marine Corps combat forces will lose almost 9,000 battle-trained men under the military manpower cutback demanded by the Administration.

General Randolph McC. Pate has told Congress "significant reductions" in Marine combat units must be made because earlier manpower cuts already have:

- Created understrength combat units which cannot be further weakened "horizontally."

- Reduced supporting forces to a point where only 5,500 additional men can be eliminated.

In testimony released 30 March by the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee, General Pate said the Corps absorbed earlier reductions by "cutting back the supporting establishment and the security forces, and by holding the combat forces at an average of about 87 per cent of their full personnel strength."

To man individual fighting units at a lower percentage "would render them incapable of performing a combat mission," General Pate said. "In actual combat, when losses reduce your personnel strength to some 80% of what it should be, you reorganize, and distribute personnel from some units to all the others, to bring the remaining ones up to full, effective combat strength."

The Marine Commandant said he is "applying this principle now. We are deactivating two battalion landing teams in each of our three divisions. All remaining divisional units will be maintained at not less than 90% of their table of organization strength."

Combat aviation strength also will be reduced, he said. "By 30 June, six aircraft squadrons and 100 additional aircraft will be deleted from our three aircraft wings."

General Pate said he has "no recourse other than to deactivate some units, and spread their personnel among the remaining ones. By doing that we can keep the units that are left at peak combat efficiency."

In answer to questions about Marine Corps manpower requirements, General Pate said his opinion hasn't changed since last year when he testified that he considers "200,000 Marines to be the minimum under the circumstances." The Corps is slated to be reduced to 175,000 by 30 June.

General Pate also testified that funds requested in the fiscal '60 budget for Marine Corps material will provide "only the minimum required to sustain the Marine Corps in its role as a force-in-readiness."

He said the Corps does "not have stocks on hand to support any prolonged combat operation" and funds requested in the budget will not improve this situation.

Secretary of Defense McElroy disclosed that the Marine cuts will result in the deactivation of six infantry battalions, six artillery battalions, six pioneer platoons, six antitank platoons, six motor transport platoons, two fixed-wing transport squadrons, one fixed-wing transport group and one fighter group.

He said Marine aircraft wing elements remaining after the deactivations "will be approximately 80% of authorized strength."

Bu Yards & Docks Restores Historic USNA Drawings By Use Of Its 105-MM System

A set of restored blueprints of Dahlgren Hall, dating back to 1898, will be presented to RADM. Charles L. Melson, U. S. Naval Academy Superintendent, by RADM. Eugene J. Peltier, CEC, Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, at a special ceremony in May.

The Dahlgren drawings—there are about 30 in the set—were restored from a group of blueprints that were practically unsalvageable bits of scrap paper. Restoration of the badly damaged 1898 blueprints was termed by a Navy representative as a "fantastic" piece of work. Reconstruction of the 60-year-old Dahlgren Hall prints is part of the Bureau of Yards and Docks 105 mm Miniaturization Program calling for build-up of a complete set of blueprints of all Navy structures.

For the past several years, BuDocks has been confronted with a mounting volume of mutilated original drawings and a growing amount of uncorrelated reproduced copies of blueprints, and blue-line drawings. Many of these drawings had been reproduced on 35 mm film and stored in archives. It was found, however, that when Navy Civil Engineers needed these films as references for working out redesign of older Navy structures, it was impossible to obtain legible blow-ups of old drawings.

Full size drawings are a requirement for economical remodeling of old buildings. For example, it is necessary for an engineer to know exactly where supporting structures are within the walls and floors of a building before remodeling work can proceed. The engineer also must know where electrical wiring and piping is located. Since 35 mm microfilm did not permit clear, full-size blow-backs, the Navy sought another method.

After exhaustive tests of 35, 70 and 105 mm film sources, the Navy found that the 105 mm process offered the solution to its problem. Prime contractor for the 105 mm Miniaturization Program is Cooper-Trent Microfilm Corp., Arlington, Va. The process was developed by Keuffel & Esser Co., Hoboken, N. J.

Chief features of the 105 mm program are its adaptability to a completely centralized system, its ability to allow construction engineers to refer to data directly from the film, and the ease of equipment use.

The 105 mm film can be stored in a 5x8" card file.

The Navy is converting all of its architectural and engineering drawings to the 105 mm system. When the program is completed, Navy construction engineers will have easy access to blueprints of all Navy structures throughout the world.

Development Center Seeks Battle Jerkin; Lightweight Food Must Taste Good

MARINE CORPS LANDING FORCE
DEVELOPMENT CENTER, QUANTICO, VA.

THE Marine Corps is attempting to make protective body armor more useful by converting it into a battle jerkin.

The Marine Corps Landing Force Development Center is experimenting with a number of designs to determine which will give the most freedom of action.

Objective of the tests is to redesign existing body armor so that food, ammunition, and canteens can be carried by the individual Leatherneck in battle.

The combination body armor-battle jerkin resembles an oversized vest with deep pockets.

Asked by THE JOURNAL if the Corps was experimenting with new light-weight, dehydrated rations for combat soldiers, Brig. Gen. Samuel R. Shaw, Development Center Chief, responded firmly that any ration accepted for front-line Marines would have to be "damned delicious."

The General—a former enlisted man—noted that weight reduction of combat rations is in line with the Corps' overall effort to slash the loads carried by helicopters under the "vertical assault" doctrine. He said, however, that weight reductions will not be made to the detriment of good diet and palatability.

General Shaw said a Marine fighting man "cannot be treated as a machine into which you can pour a given amount of calories in order to obtain a specific amount of energy."

The MCLFDC Chief asserted that any foods adopted for Marine use "must be of superb quality so that the exhausted, combat Marine will want to eat them."

General Shaw recalled that during WWII some combat rations were of such poor quality that "men barely ate enough to keep alive and provided barely enough energy to 'take that hill'."

THE JOURNAL asked if consideration was being given to making use of edible containers in an effort to further reduce the weight of combat rations. The General discounted the idea stating that a great deal of work would have to be done in the edible container field before they would become palatable enough for Marine use.

Cluster Of Oak Leaves Seen Possible Choice For Technical Corps Insignia

What insignia will be worn on the sleeves of specialist officers if Congress approves the proposal to create a Naval Technical Corps?

The Naval Uniform Board, not wishing to create a new sleeve insignia arbitrarily, plans to base the design on the desire of a majority of officers affected. The Board will invite suggestions for the new sleeve device if the new Technical Corps is created by law. Officers having ideas on the subject should forward them to the Permanent Naval Uniform Board, Washington 25, D. C.

A strong possibility is that the new Corps insignia will consist of a cluster of oak leaves.

This would be consistent with current sleeve devices for other Staff Corps.

The Supply Corps mark is made up of the three oak leaves. The Medical Corps device is a single spread oak leaf with an acorn in the center. The Civil Engineer Corps designator is composed of two live oak leaves. The Medical Service Corps device is a variant of the MC spread leaf. The Dental Corps marker has two small acorns at the leaf's stem.

If a leaf arrangement were adopted for the Naval Technical Corps, there would be only three other types of sleeve designs—the Chaplain Corps Cross (or the Star of David and Tablets) and the lyre worn by Navy band leaders—in addition to the Line star.

AF Tells Promotion Plans To Captain, Sets Zones For Medics And Chaplains

The Air Force has revealed first details for its fiscal '60 temporary promotion program for officers, with release of cutoff dates for first lieutenants and all grades on the Medical Services and Chaplains lists.

A Headquarters message called upon major commanders to report by 10 May the number of eligible officers assigned their commands as of 31 March 1959 under the following date of rank in current active duty grade criteria:

Line officers to captain—31 December 1956.

MEDICAL SERVICES AND CHAPLAINS

To Captain—31 December 1956.

To Major—31 December 1954.

To Lieutenant Colonel—31 December 1955.

To Colonel—31 December 1955.

The Air Force said that "final implementing instructions for FY '60 Temporary Promotion Program for the other Line grades will be forthcoming in the near future. In this connection, revision of AFR 36-89 has been postponed indefinitely."

GEN. LeMAY TRIES BIG TRANSPORT

DC-8 Makes First Flight To East Coast; Air Force Officials See And Fly New Jet

Air Force officers from the Pentagon and from the Air Research and Development Command at Andrews AFB were given an opportunity to inspect and fly the new Douglas DC-8 when it arrived at Friendship International Airport this week on the first transcontinental flight of the new four-jet transport.

One of the first to fly the new aircraft was General Curtis E. LeMay, Air Force Vice Chief of Staff and an old hand at flying long-range jet transports.

The big jet landed at Friendship 4 hours and 13 minutes after it left Edwards AFB, Calif., where it has been under test by Douglas engineers. Bad weather at Friendship and lack of suitable tailwinds obviated any attempt to break the transcontinental record.

The giant transport was welcomed at Friendship by Lt. Gen. Ira C. Eaker, USAF-Ret., Eastern Vice President of the Douglas Aircraft Co., and a large number of company officials and newsmen.

Among those making the transcontinental trip were Gerald E. Donovan, Douglas Vice President for finance; Charles R. Able, Director of Weapon Systems for Douglas; O. B. Marble, Advertising Director; A. G. Heimerdinger, Chief Pilot, and William M. Magruder and William B. Bridgeman, co-pilots.

First delivery of a DC-8 to an airline will be in May when one will be turned over to United. Airline operations will begin in November. To date 144 DC-8's have been ordered. They can carry 101 passengers in first-class seat configuration or up to 180 in tourist arrangement.

The Air Force, which is short on modern transport aircraft, is considerably interested in the DC-8.

RESERVE FORCES ACTION:

M/G Shoop Joins Air Policy Group; Minnesota Air Guard Won't Get Base

Maj. Gen. Clarence A. Shoop, California Air National Guard CoFS, has been named to the Air National Guard Policy Committee by Under Secretary of the Air Force Malcolm A. McIntyre.

General Shoop fills the vacancy on the six-man group created by the death last December of Brig. Gen. George R. Dodson of Oregon. Concurrent with his assignment to the ANC committee, General Shoop becomes a member of the Air Reserve Forces Policy Committee, which includes representatives of the Air Force Reserve and the active Air Force as well as the Air National Guard. As ranking member of the parent committee, General Shoop will serve as its chairman when the group next meets in Washington 4 May.

General Shoop, 51, a test pilot for west coast aviation companies for more than 20 years, is a Vice President and Director of Product Reliability for the Hughes Aircraft Company of Los Angeles. He is current in most of the Air Force's latest Century series jet fighters.

General Shoop is married to the former Julie Bishop of Hollywood.

The Air Force says it will not be able to build the Bethel, Minnesota, air base for use by the State's Air National Guard "due to projected changes in the mission and aircraft of the 109th Fighter Interceptor Squadron."

It was stated that: a change in ANG programs in the future is almost certain, due to advancements in missiles and ground-to-air atomic capable weapon systems. This will mean a gradual reduction in the requirement for manned fighter interceptor aircraft in both the Regular Air Force and the Air National Guard.

The President has nominated the following officers for appointment to the grades indicated in the Reserve of the Air Force for service as members of the Air National Guard of the United States:

TO MAJOR GENERAL

Curtis, Lewis A. Butler, Howard F.

TO BRIGADIER GENERAL

McEntire, B. B., Jr. George, Raymond L.

At "Willie," the pilots receive 25 hours in the T-33 and 39 hours of classroom instruction.

The nine students in the present class are: Colonel Joyce, Maj. Richard K. Easley, Maj. Bill J. Jurczyn and Maj. Norman E. Blomgren from Langley; Capt. Jeff J. Piercy, 12th Air Force; Capt. Stephen H. Wurtz, Shaw AFB, S. C.; Capt. Russell H. Swanson and Capt. Thomas F. X. O'Connor from Williams; and 1st Lt. Alfred J. Murrey from Hq 9th Air Force, Shaw AFB, S. C.

Joe Draper Leaves AF Information Program

After 18 years of Federal Service, 12 with the Air Force Public Information Service, Joe Draper, 38, has retired because of a physical disability at Travis AFB, Calif.

He will devote his time as a freelance aviation writer, with the San Antonio Office of Convair as his headquarters.

Mr. Draper was Chief of Information Services for the Western Transport Air Force of MATS.

He and his wife, the former Lillian Bemis, are the parents of Jackie, 15, Barbara, 13 and Lynn 12.

The Drapers will spend some time at 211 Betty Jean Street, the home of Joe's parents before they settle down at 212 Bannell Street.

AF Will Appoint 3,958 New Regulars

The Air Force plans to appoint 3,958 Regular officers in the fiscal year starting 1 July.

This would include 965 Military Academy and Distinguished Military Graduate.

Appointments from the 2-5 year active duty group are expected to total 2,993.

Surplus Airmen Retraining

The Air Force, which last September directed 11 major ZI commands to institute retraining for 9,000 noncommissioned officers in surplus areas, reports that as of the beginning of March 85% of the quota had been met—described as "excellent progress." New retraining quotas will be allocated about 1 May.

Air Force Joins Army And Navy To Pay Eight Cents A Mile For Local Auto Travel

From first page—

Transportation, Travel and Per Diem Allowance Committee 26 March. As THE JOURNAL went to press, preparations were being made to implement the new authority.

All Services now pay five cents a mile for temporary duty travel by private vehicle when the use of a private car is not considered "advantageous to the Government; six cents a mile for change of station travel by private vehicle; and seven cents a mile for temporary duty travel by private vehicle when it is considered "advantageous to the Government."

Reimbursement for the use of privately-owned vehicles for official travel within and adjacent to a permanent or temporary duty station, finance officials point out, may only be made when the local commander certifies that the use of a private car is on official business and is "advantageous to the Government."

In a separate action, taken prior to approval of the eight cent local travel rate, the Air Force Inspector General stressed that some Air Force personnel "have been absorbing the cost of using their own vehicles rather than trying to buck rigid controls imposed by local authority."

He said the Air Force feels its personnel should collect such payments.

The Inspector General also noted that many commanders may not be aware that authority does exist for such reimbursable payments. Other commanders, he added, should consider local conditions and "re-evaluate their policies relative to the reimbursement for official business travel."

"Onerous Restrictions" Demand Congressional Action

The firm defense presented by Secretary of Defense McElroy against attacks upon retired officers employed in industry (see story on first page) recalls the entire network of "onerous restrictions" placed upon this group by the existing maze of numerous and ancient laws.

The restrictions upon retired officers employed by firms doing business with the government is one phase of these laws which seriously hampers the utilization of skilled and experienced personnel. In addition there are more than 35 laws in the so-called dual employment and dual compensation categories which bar the government itself from making use of this vast pool of valuable manpower.

Representative Craig Hosmer of California has sought vigorously in the 84th, 85th and now, again, in the 86th Congress to repeal the dual employment statutes and amend the dual compensation laws. Despite strong support from the public and many government agencies, Mr. Hosmer's bills have never been acted upon by the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, to which they have been referred by the Speaker. In the last Congress, Representative Tom Murray, chairman of this committee, was quoted as saying that this problem has been before his group for the past ten years—a strong reason, it seems to us, why it should be given prompt consideration.

Fortunately, there are some indications that the Post Office and Civil Service Committee may act. We are told that its staff is reviewing and studying these ancient laws and that their conclusions may be presented to the committee. Certainly, all the work that Congressman Hosmer has done in this field (in 1957 he presented an analysis that consumed 18 pages of the Congressional Record) would supply ample background.

We urge that the Post Office and Civil Service Committee put Mr. Hosmer's bill, HR 522, on its calendar for early hearings and consideration.

NATO'S Tenth Anniversary

Just as an earlier crisis over Berlin spurred free nations into uniting in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, so today member nations observe NATO's tenth anniversary under the shadow of another challenge from the German capital.

This week representatives of the 15 NATO nations gather in Washington where their alliance was signed in 1949. Next week they will visit the Norfolk headquarters of Admiral Jerauld Wright, USN, Supreme Allied Commander Atlantic.

In review, it must be noted that NATO's forces have fallen short of the ambitious goal set for them when the alliance first got underway. At that time the aim was to have 100 divisions by 1954. Subsequently this objective was reduced to 30 divisions but no target date was set. Today NATO actually has 21 divisions, including five from the United States, four British, and seven from the new West German army. A number of these 21 divisions are under strength, while France's contribution is tied up in Algeria.

Despite this picture (NATO's ground strength has declined in the past three years), its record has been good. As Admiral Wright points out, "For ten years the NATO Alliance has resisted each and every attempt the Soviet Union has made to add more European territory to the string of satellites she engulfed and subverted after World War II. NATO was born in 1949 as a military alliance for collective security. Through the combined efforts of the member nations, and the military men in them, we have been successful in maintaining peace." There have been shooting wars in Korea and Indochina, but NATO has held the line in Western Europe.

General Lauris Norstad, Supreme Allied Commander Europe, handicapped as he is by shortages in many categories, has organized and trained his forces so that the Soviets can not look upon them lightly. In fact, the verbal barrages which constantly emanate from Russia and her satellites are an ever present reminder of NATO's value.

As the representatives meet in the United States on this tenth anniversary we hope their unity will be strengthened, as well as their determination to build up their forces. Russia's constant efforts to divide and destroy NATO must serve to bring them even closer together.

"People Of Service" Behind The Iron Curtain

THE JOURNAL is privileged to publish on Page 18 of this issue the warmly documented report by Mrs. Barksdale Hamlett on the activities of U.S. Service wives behind the Iron Curtain in Berlin. We believe that this on-the-scene account answers with telling effectiveness the demands that have been made on Capitol Hill for the withdrawal of military families from Berlin.

Mrs. Hamlett, whose husband, Major General Hamlett, is the U.S. Commander in Berlin, tells the story of how the wives there "face each day with confidence and willing hearts." There is no question that the quiet confidence of the U.S. Service families in Berlin has a heartening effect on the citizens of West Germany in their time of crisis.

Mrs. Hamlett and the other U.S. wives are in Berlin because that is precisely where they want to be—side by side with their husbands. The dauntless spirit of the wives is matched by their humanitarian activities in helping students, orphans, and the thousands of refugees from East Germany who stream into Berlin.

Every Service family will be thrilled by Mrs. Hamlett's report on the "People of Service" projects being conducted by the American Women's Club of Berlin, the Enlisted Men's Wives Club, the 6th Infantry Wives Club, and the Tempelhof Air Force Wives Club.

To the faint-of-heart who want to remove the U.S. family touch from the Berlin "Showcase of Freedom," we earnestly commend a thoughtful reading of Mrs. Hamlett's article. To her and to all the Service families in Berlin, we send our congratulations for a brilliant record of service.

READERS' VIEWS

Work For Your Stars!

I cannot help replying to the article "Engineer Generals' Tally" placed on page 10 under Readers' Views in the 14 March '59 issue.

"General Officers of the Corps of Engineers"—"I am a Regular Army non-West Point Colonel in the Corps of Engineers, the same as the writer of the letter signed 'More Concerned.' In the first place, 'Colonel More Concerned' should be more accurate in his statements. Does he know that the Chief of Engineers cannot cause one of his Colonels to be promoted to Brigadier General? Does he know how many non-West Point Colonels the Chief of Engineers has recommended to be General Officers? I doubt if I will ever be promoted to Brigadier General; however, I know the reason why and it is just because there are too many of my fellow contemporaries in the Corps that are better than I am—and most of them are West Pointers. This non-West Point 'Colonel More Concerned' who is so concerned over his not being appointed to one of the few General Officer spaces allocated to the Corps of Engineers, would have a very difficult time selecting the specific General Officer of the Corps which he thinks he excels. He need only to look in the mirror.

"Does 'Colonel More Concerned' feel that he is aiding the Corps of Engineers secure the fine young Officers they need from the ROTC's and like sources, by writing such letters as the one he wrote? There is no real West Point Protective Association nor has there been in my twenty-two years of continuous Service in the Corps of Engineers! Every schoolmate generally has a friendly feeling for another who has graduated from the same College or University from which he graduated and, if they graduated in the same Class, they are generally much closer friends. This friendship does not mean that they will 'cheat' their fellow officers. Reflecting on the past, I find that I have been treated more fairly by West Pointers than those who were not. They are taught a 'Code of Honor' at the Point that is not hard to detect. They seldom 'gossip' about fellow Officers and very seldom discuss their Superiors in a derogatory manner. Such kind of 'gossip' is common among non-West Pointers. The letter of 'Colonel More Concerned' is a typical example of such disloyalty to our Superiors. I feel sorry for an Officer who has spent the majority of his life with a Corps and has no more loyalty to it than shown by 'Colonel More Concerned.' I certainly do not resent a West Pointer being friendly with a fellow schoolmate and if he were not friendly with his Classmates, I would feel that he needed psychiatric care.

"We non-West Point Colonels in the Corps of Engineers had better get busy and start working if we want stars. Sitting back on our haunches and crying 'foul' certainly isn't going to get them.

"NON-WEST POINT COLONEL, CORPS OF ENGINEERS"

IN THE JOURNAL

10 Years Ago—What the Army lacks in size it must make up in quality. Under the President's Budget for 1950 the Army will be composed of ten divisions, and 59 separate battalions, supported by a National Guard of 325,000 and an Organized Reserve of 230,000.

50 Years Ago—An order was promulgated by the President Saturday, 27 March, restoring the Marine Corps to the vessels of the Navy on the same basis of duty and service that they enjoyed before the recent sweeping order by President Roosevelt removing the corps and assigning it to duty on "the second line of land defense."

95 Years Ago—Officers who have visited the Western armies report many cases of scurvy. A vast number of patients in the U. S. General Hospitals are suffering from the effects of bad and badly-prepared rations. In many cases this is the fault of company officers who do not give proper attention to the cooking. But by far the greatest amount of the disease arises from want of vegetables.

Pay Of Flight Surgeons

There are two additional matters which you did not mention in your interesting article about Flight Surgeons in the 14 March issue:

All Army Flight Surgeons are paid only non-crew member flight pay ($110), no matter what their duty, length of service, or experience, which contrasts with the rated flight pay given Air Force and Navy Flight Surgeons. Based on personal experience with Flight Surgeons of the several services, I would say that duties and hazards are comparable. On the other hand, the Army system seems eminently fair; perhaps the other services might be interested in adopting it.

Secondly, you failed to mention that Army Aviation Medicine personnel have an additional month of schooling at the Army Aviation School, Fort Rucker, Alabama.

General Taylor Says Top-Heavy Strategic Force Calls For All-Service Reappraisal

glions, planes, aircraft carriers, submarines, and the like. What I have described is the procedure as I see it, for developing a rational basis for the forces required by all the Services.

Mr. Mahon—How could that be brought to bear? Do we need any legislation or reorganization to do that? Why can that not be done?

General Taylor—Within our own walls many of us in the Department of the Army and elsewhere feel this kind of procedure is something we should phase into. It is not easy and it would call for many administrative and budgetary changes. I would say a committee of this sort, however, would be thoroughly justified in asking for a breakout of forces in the format described to get some concept of what the 1960 budget would do for these six categories of joint forces rather than viewing each Service vertically.

Here the Army is before you talking Army business. You will soon have the Navy and the Air Force come along. Rather, I would visualize a presentation to you of a composite of the contribution of all three Services. . . .

On Need For Carriers:

Mr. Mahon—You have made some reference to the bomber program. Do you think it wise at this time for the Congress to provide funds for an additional supercarrier?

General Taylor—I would say that my personal opinion is that we have an ample number of carriers. However, I have not had the benefit of all the arguments pro and con which influenced this decision.

Mr. Mahon—We discussed just yesterday, the great number of limited wars. You are aware that a majestic carrier on the sea is a show of power. It is a weapon of war and the weapon of diplomacy. The point is, you think probably we have a sufficient number?

General Taylor—I certainly would not derogate from the importance of the carrier. It makes both a general war contribution and a limited war contribution. However, if you add up the numbers available to the Navy, it is very substantial. I am always reminded that in Korea, which was a large limited war, we never had nor needed more than four carriers on station. . . .

On Army Division Structure:

Representative Gerald R. Ford, Jr. (R-Mich.)—One thing which bothers me is that we hear the statement that you have less disciplinary problems than you had before, this year compared to previous years. We hear from the medical people that they are able to keep people on duty productively with less time lost in hospitals this year compared to previous years. We see figures on reenlistment rates which are encouraging. Yet I do not get the impression that those benefits are translated into more combat effectiveness or units.

I appreciate that you feel you do better within the structure that you want or which is in the budget, but I do not see any willingness to say that because of these benefits we can draw down the structure divisionwise or otherwise. Would you comment on that?

General Taylor—The Secretary has responded to the question concerning the overall numerical strength. However, I believe that you were also interested in structure, in terms of units vis-a-vis our actual numerical strength.

I would say that from the military point of view, we are overstructured now, and will continue to be overstructured with the 14-division force. In other words, we do not have the necessary strength to hold all of our units at the desirable strength levels. If this were a domestic Army—in other words, if our forces were all at home—I would recommend to the Secretary that we reduce our structure rather drastically.

Certainly, from the strictly military point of view, there is no question that it is preferable to have strong, sound units, which are up to strength and combat ready, rather than a larger number of units which are weakened to a degree by the requirement to diffuse available manpower among them.

However, in view of our overseas commitments we are not free to take any such action. Divisions per se have taken on great political significance in the international climate. I am sure that I would be restrained if I were to recommend a reduction in divisions in either Europe or Korea. Hence, we have retained a structure which, as I say, from strictly military considerations is overextended. . . .

Mr. Ford—Surely, I agree there is a point of irreducible minimum.

BREMERHAVEN MEETING—Senior Army, Navy, and Coast Guard officers, led by RADM. D. T. Eller, USN, Commanding Officer, MSTs, Atlantic Area, and Maj. Gen. E. M. Houseman, USA, Commanding Officer U. S. Army Transportation Terminal Command, Atlantic, discuss their visit of Military Sea Transport Service and U. S. Army Port of Embarkation operations and facilities at Bremerhaven, Germany. Left to right: Capt. Harry E. Davey, USN, Commanding Officer, MSTs, Bremerhaven; Brig. Gen. Frederick T. Voorhees, USA, Office of the Chief of Transportation, Department of the Army; RADM. Eller; Maj. Gen. Houseman; RADM. H. C. Perkins, USCG, Commander of the Third Coast Guard District, and Port Commander Col. Irving W. Brooks, USA.

General Taylor—We have reached it and gone beyond it, in my opinion.

On Role Of Joint Chiefs

Representative Melvin R. Laird (R-Wisc.)—Did I understand you to say that the JCS had never given consideration to the carrier that is included in this budget?

General Taylor—That is correct, sir. Mr. Laird—Does not that carrier have some place in our future war planning of our country?

General Taylor—It was never justified before the Joint Chiefs of Staff. . . .

Representative Harry R. Sheppard (D-Calif.)—It was my interpretation from the statement made by General Twining that the JCS had made a thorough review of the requirements and they were all within the framework of the war planning. Does that interpretation agree with yours?

Mr. Laird—That was my understanding. That is why I could not follow through on this aircraft carrier. I assumed that all was part of that and this is new information so far as I am concerned.

General Taylor—The Navy building program, per se, never has been acted upon by the JCS.

Representative George W. Andrews (D-Ala.)—General, did the Joint Chiefs discuss the additional B-52's in this budget?

General Taylor—They never passed on that. . . .

Chairman Mahon—General, you began a statement in answer to a question by Mr. Laird. . . . Will you complete your answer?

On JCS Specific Endorsements:

General Taylor—I think I did. I simply made the point that line items, such as the carrier, as a matter of practice are generally not submitted to the Joint Chiefs of Staff for specific endorsement.

Mr. Mahon—What are the JCS worth if they do not take up things as big as a $300 million supercarrier?

Representative Daniel J. Flood (D-Pa.)—And 70 B-52's?

Mr. Mahon—I can understand nuts and bolts and things like that not being considered. However, it is ridiculous to think that weapons as basic and as big as aircraft carriers should not be considered by the Joint Chiefs. This country deserves a better setup and a better organization.

Mr. Laird—I don't see how the Joint Chiefs of Staff can separate all these things from the job that they have, such as the B-52's, the aircraft carrier, and so on. It seems to me that is something which fits in with our overall defense plans, and I assume you have the responsibility as a member of the Joint Chiefs for the overall approval of defense plans?

General Taylor—That is correct. What you are raising, Mr. Laird, is an example of a principle which I discussed yesterday, namely, that our system is not properly organized. It is not just the Joint Chiefs. We share the responsibility, I am not evading that point. However, we do not take the aircraft carrier and decide, for example, whether its contribution to the general atomic war capability is necessary. We have never done it that way.

On Needs Of Overseas Commanders:

Representative Glenard P. Lipscomb (R-Calif.)—During this hearing, General Taylor, you have expressed a theory on a balanced defense program. I want to see if I understand it. You believe each branch of the Services, Army, Navy and Air Force, should develop its program and then it should be put together and a horizontal look taken at it to see where we stand. Is that correct?

General Taylor—That is a little oversimplified. I would call on our responsible overseas commanders first. For example, I would ask General Norstad what kinds of forces from all three Services he believes he needs to accomplish his mission. I would do the same thing with CINCPac, the same thing with our Alaskan commander, and so on.

Then, the JCS would put the replies together in terms of those functional units and those functional categories of units which I described yesterday. That would be the first look at it. In other words, I would determine what our responsible commanders think they need in terms of types of units.

Next, the horizontal review by the Joint Chiefs would be turned over to the Department of Defense budget experts for costing purposes. From this would develop the first dollar requirements budget.

Knowing the facts of life and that all commanders tend to overstate their needs—at least, they often feel that they cannot get what they need without so doing—there would follow a squeezing down process carried out jointly among the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the overseas commanders. By this means, the final structure would then be related primarily to the requirements established by these commanders.

The next step would be for someone to strip out the Army forces required and pass them to Secretary Brucker, saying, "Now you provide, train, equip and support these forces." The same thing would go for the Navy and for the Air Force. . . .

On Force Tabs:

Representative William E. Minshall (R-Ohio)—You do not actually discuss, then, whether or not more B-52's are needed on behalf of the Air Force or whether or not an additional aircraft carrier might be needed, or the numbers of the ground troops in the Army?

General Taylor—We do consider such matters in planning. For example, the most important annual planning paper of the Joint Chiefs is the joint strategic objectives plan developed for a period three years ahead. The last one we worked on is JSOP-62, or the joint strategic objectives' plan for 1962. This plan states an agreed strategic concept which depicts in written form the kind of war or wars we believe our Nation should be prepared to fight. It generally breaks out the requirements for general war, limited war, and cold war in descriptive prose. The Joint Chiefs of Staff are in accord on that particular paper.

Following this we should also have appended to this plan the so-called force tabs, which would in effect state that in order to execute the agreed strategy described in the plan, the Army should have so many forces in terms of divisions and support, the Navy so many ships and the Air Force so many wings of various types. That is where the carriers would be taken into consideration as well as the B-52's.

The JCS have never reached complete agreement on these force tabs, however. We have come very close to agreeing on many categories of forces, but in all the planning I have been involved in, we have always split on important parts of the force tabs.

The result is that the Secretary of Defense is then placed in the unhappy position of having his principal military experts differ as to the kind and quantity of forces necessary to support the strategic concept to which they have all agreed.

In this situation, the Secretary does the best he can. He derives such benefit as may be available from the split document, and that presumably aids him in developing the budget guidelines which are stated to the Service Departments in terms of ceilings on personnel, both active and Reserves, and in funds. These guidelines then become the framework within which a departmental budget is prepared. Each Service then comes forward with its requirements, which ideally would provide the forces to support force tabs which in turn support the strategy. That is the theory. . . .

On Army Strength:

General Taylor—In preparing my recommendation to the Secretary for the Army's strength this year, and to confirm what I thought I had learned from my visits about the world and about the United States, I went to my Army Commanders and asked "In view of your mission and the job you have, what personnel strength do you consider is essential to your mission?"

When I added up the requests that came back I was not surprised to find it was more than I thought would be necessary. The total was almost one million men. I then reviewed these requirements worldwide and, taking everything into account, considered that 925,000 men would probably do the job. That was the basis of my recommendation to the Secretary of the Army. I did this, taking into account the improvements which you have in mind.

I always remind myself, gentlemen, that the Soviets are improving, too. The fact that we improve is good. It would be intolerable if we did not. The question is, "what is our relative improvement?"

"Is it true," we ask, "that we are going to have better men in the Army next year than this year?" I hope that year after next our men will be better than this year. The task of the Army has not changed since Korea.

Using the analogy of a fighter, at that time we were a fighter who had 1,500,000 units of strength. The weight of that

THE STRIKING FACT that the JCS does not get to the heart of the matter in determining military force levels and major weapons has never been brought more sharply in focus than during the closed-door testimony before the House Appropriations Subcommittee, reported in detail in this issue. If Members of Congress receive similar responses to their inquiries next year, it will be surprising if new demands for changes in the JCS set-up are not voiced on Capitol Hill.

THE INTRIGUING LETTER signed by the JCS members and published in the 7 February issue of The Journal in which they found "no serious gaps in key elements of the budget in its present form," but advised that "all have reservations with respect to the funding of some segment of their respective Service programs," is illuminated by the newly released testimony of General Taylor. He revealed how long the Joint Chiefs had to consider the final budget: ONE DAY.

THE DRIVE TO END FINANCIAL LOSSES being incurred by Air Force people who must use their automobiles in carrying out local, official duties (see Page 1) is certain to be welcome news in all the Services. For years, this has been a vexing problem. The new attention being given to the situation is an important move forward. The realities of the case, however, are that budget restrictions and red tape requirements will mean that Service officers will continue to drive thousands and thousands of miles each year in their own cars on official missions for which there will be no financial compensation. Still and all, it's good to be able to report that The Inspector General of the Air Force, whose mission requires him to check constantly on the proper utilization of Federal resources, is reminding commanders that they have ample authority, if they want to use it, to facilitate payments for private use of automobiles on official trips.

A NEWLY DISCLOSED SPEECH BY CNO BURKE will be of salient interest to Air Force officers who recall the time, a decade ago, when as Captain Burke of Op-23 he played a prominent role in challenging the Air Force doctrine—then linked to the B-36—concerning the need for a massive deterrent capability. Navy leaders assailed the Air Force's position, contending that retaliatory forces should be tailored precisely to a specific need.

ALTHOUGH IT IS USUAL PRACTICE for top Service schools not to release the text of addresses made behind closed doors, the March issue of the Budget Bureau-sanctioned 48-page "Monthly Newsletter" of the Navy's Bureau of Supplies and Accounts publishes the text of an address made by CNO to the Naval War College.

ADMIRAL BURKE, calling for U. S. firmness in the face of Soviet threats, told the Naval War College students: "To deter general nuclear war, we must have a real, demonstrable, and preferably, an invulnerable capability to inflict wide-spread destruction. A true deterrent," the Admiral continued, "has no gradations. It does not need a condition of more deterrent or most deterrent. For these reasons," the CNO said, "the Navy of the future may have only a relatively small percentage of its forces devoted to the all-out nuclear deterrent problem, but these forces will be virtually invulnerable."

EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION against retired military officers is a problem which has not escaped the study of Secretary of Defense McElroy. He demonstrated a detailed knowledge of the problem during Congressional testimony (see First Page). Service people, active and retired alike, will hope that the Secretary is able to complete action on a new conflict-of-interests directive before he leaves the Pentagon. Beyond that, legislation is necessary to eliminate ancient laws which deny Federal positions to thousands of retired officers—many of them with skills urgently needed by the Government.

ONE CRITICAL AREA in which the Government is denied an opportunity to use retired officers is in the medical field. Assistant Secretary Berry is known to be urging that more retired Armed Forces physicians be allowed to accept Federal billets.

THE ARMY MADE NO PRESS RELEASE of its decision to shift Combat Command "A" from soon-to-be-deactivated Ft. Polk, La., to Ft. Hood, Tex., beginning in May, and the transfer of the 2d Missile Command from Hood to Ft. Carson, Colo., the home of the 9th Infantry Division, the division the Army likely will eliminate from the rolls to meet budget requirements. No press announcement was made either that advanced artillery training at Ft. Chaffee, Ark., also to be deactivated, will be transferred to Ft. Sill, Okla. The Army made this information available to Members of Congress and provided the facts to newsmen on an "inquiry basis."

THE MISSILE COMMAND MOVE to Ft. Carson will keep that Pikes Peak post open. Don't be surprised if the Army is forced, under new budget pressure, to close a number of additional facilities after work on the fiscal '60 budget is completed and Congress has gone home. It would be an easier action on the political front to shut facilities during the last half of this year, rather than in the 1960 election year.

SERVICE FAMILIES WITH DENTAL PROBLEMS will be disappointed with the Pentagon's decision (see Page 1) to defer to the influential American Dental Association and not press this year for legislation to authorize a Family DentiCare Program. It's a clear case, of course, where Pentagon policy is being dictated in good part by a civilian group.

THERE IS SOME HOPE FOR DENTICARE next year in the strong reaffirmation by Assistant Secretary of Defense Berry that he considers MediCare and DentiCare inseparable in proper patient care. Dr. Berry, who has achieved notable successes in gaining the full support of the American Medical Association for MediCare, is working hard to convince the American Dental Association that it should reconsider the matter of DentiCare at a meeting in September and endorse the proposal. Then, of course, it would be essential that the Budget Bureau not drill holes in Dr. Berry's plan to alleviate dental hardships of Service families.

SUBMARINERS AND PARATROOPERS WILL ENVY flying officers in all the Services, some of whom will be able, under new Pentagon policies, to receive flight pay without the necessity of proficiency flying. It's been a sore point with submariners and paratroopers that when they are assigned to desk slots, they must forfeit their extra pay.

GENERAL TAYLOR'S ANTICIPATED BOOK following his 30 June retirement can be expected to achieve more effective impact insofar as winning support for the Army's position is concerned than any similar document in recent years. Unlike his predecessor, General Ridgway, and his long-time airborne and staff subordinate, Lieutenant General Gavin, the Chief of Staff has managed to keep personality conflicts separate from the controversies in which the Army has been involved.

THERE WILL LIKELY BE LESS FIRE in General Taylor's post-retirement expressions than has characterized the declarations of his former colleagues, but the quiet light which he can be expected to bring to bear on urgent problems is certain to command close attention in influential circles of government and civilian leadership. There's no question that General Taylor's Congressional testimony on the fiscal '60 budget has been extremely effective—on its own merits—shorn of any overpowering clash with his superiors.

IN A MARKSMAN VS. MISSILE CONTEST conducted in the Pentagon Concourse this week, the sharpshooters won hands down. An exhibit prepared by the USAF Marksmanship Center at Lackland AFB, Tex., attracted far greater interest than an adjacent Army missile exhibit. One reason was that the AF display had the personal touch of four marksmen who answered all manner of questions. They were Lt. Richard J. Gorey, M/Sgt. John L. Johnson, T/Sgt. John L. Keyser, and A/1c Paul H. Stapper.

THE ARMY'S GUIDED MISSILE SCHOOL at Redstone Arsenal, Ala., wastes no opportunity to accent its space activities. A newly issued press release tells in the first paragraph how use of new "space age electronic devices," primarily closed-circuit television, is cutting training time. The third paragraph recounts how the "Space Academy," as the school calls itself, has pioneered the use of closed circuit television "for space age education with long-distance telecasts to other training centers."

DESPITE ITS STRIKING SUCCESSES WITH SPACE PROBES, the Army feels the lack of a clear-cut statement pertaining to roles and missions in space. The Army is studying carefully the Air Force's internal information statement (The Journal 28 March), which makes the emphatic point that the Air Force "which is primarily responsible for preparing forces for the Nation's aerospace offensive operations, is also primarily responsible for preparing forces for its aerospace defensive operations."

ARMY LEADERS DO NOT CONCEDE that their Service should be denied primary responsibilities for aerospace operations. The immediate controversy pertains to the Nike Zeus missile, particularly which Service will be primarily responsible for the development of doctrine and employment of the weapon. But the issue goes far beyond Zeus to other "upstream weapons." Finding a proper Army place in space is going to be one of the most critical problems confronting General Lemnitzer when he succeeds General Taylor as CofS.

THE LOCKHEED C-130 HERCULES IN BERLIN seems to be worrying the Soviets who are protesting the fact that the huge turboprop transport flies the corridor route through the Iron Curtain at 20,000 feet. Furthermore, the enormous carrying capacity of this behemoth, in both supplies and weapons, could give the Russians further food for thought.

DEPARTURE OF BRIG. GEN. JOHN H. MICHAELIS, the Army's Chief of Legislative Liaison, from the Capital scene will be a loss both to Congress and the Army. His quiet efficiency and understanding ways got things done to the satisfaction of the Congressmen. His next post is to command of the U. S. Army Alaska.

CARRIER TESTS WITH A DOUGLAS A4D-2 SKYHAWK equipped with 300-gallon external wing tanks and in-flight refueling gear, has demonstrated a capability by VA-12 pilots aboard the USS Forrestal for better than four-hour simulated strike flights, the Navy reports. The tests are said to have broken records for a single-engine, single-pilot aircraft, with relatively small loss in performance due to the replacement of the 150-gallon standard wing tanks.

The men:

 pilot, photographer-navigator, photo-technician
 —operating from a fast carrier task force.
 There's over a quarter of a century of naval air experience among them—much of it logged in Douglas prop-driven or jet aircraft.

The mission:

Photo reconnaissance. Navy search crews will range high and far from carrier decks, probing the terrain of troubled areas with high-speed telephoto cameras . . . returning with a cartographic film record that will reveal to sharp-eyed naval intelligence men the carefully camouflaged clues of any sneak attack-in-the-making.

OFFICIAL U.S. NAVY RECONNAISSANCE PHOTO

The means:

A3D-2 twin-jet Douglas Skywarrior, our largest carrier-based aircraft, can be modified for varied missions.
 One version, the A3D-2P, is for day or night photo reconnaissance. Another, the A3D-2Q, is equipped for electronic reconnaissance.

AIR FORCE SHARPENS "HARD CORE" DRIVE

THE Air Force, driving to strengthen its campaign to build a "hard core of professional airmen committed to an Air Force career," has issued new rules related to permanent changes of station for airmen. Effective 15 April, stateside airmen slated for a PCS in the United States and who will have less than 12 months remaining on their enlistment after reporting for duty at the new base, must (1) reenlist, (2) extend their enlistment, or (3) sign a statement barring them from reenlistment for 91 days after discharge.

Similar rules go into effect 1 November for reassignment or separation of overseas returnees ordered PCS to the United States.

Reenlistment after 90 days means loss of re-up money and, in most cases, loss of grade.

Skate Polar Voyage And Blewitt Report Underscore Future Role Of U. S. Fleet

The future of the United States fleet was dramatically underscored this week by two major developments:

- One—a second scientific exploratory voyage of the atomic-submarine Skate—foretells the possibility of operating Polaris submarines in the far polar regions.

- The other—a bleak report that the fleet "is not in an acceptable state of readiness"—focuses attention on the Navy's lagging ship construction program.

The Skate, commanded by Cdr. James F. Calvert, completed her second exploratory trip under the Arctic ice to the North Pole, surfacing ten times in a 3,090-mile, 12-day voyage. Now en route home, the boat will arrive at Groton, Conn., on 7 April.

The Navy said the Skate broke all previous records for distance and time in polar under-ice operations and established that subs can "operate at any time of the year in polar regions."

The Skate's discovery that plenty of open water is available for surfacing even in the cold Arctic winter led to immediate speculation that missile-firing Polaris submarines could be operated in the area on a year-around basis.

Shortly after the record-making voyage hit headlines around the world, the Navy was thrust into another, somewhat different spotlight with release by the House Military Appropriations Subcommittee of a censored study of the material readiness of the U. S. fleet.

Three-Man Board

The study, made by a special three-man board, headed by shipbuilder W. E. Blewitt, Jr., found that "approximately 80 per cent" of the Navy's submarines are near or "past their statutory lives."

The entire fleet "is growing old," the board reported, and is equipped "only to a very limited extent" with the weapons and equipment that modern warfare demands.

As of 30 December 1958, the Navy had only three carriers, two cruisers, 22 destroyers and 24 submarines less than ten years old. Sixty-six per cent of all Navy warships are 10-15 years of age and 22 per cent are over 15 years old, the report shows.

The board recommended:

- The Navy's role "be given greater weight in the over-all defense program."
- A substantial increase in the Navy's shipbuilding program.

- Added funds for complete rehabilitation of ships (especially destroyers) in the middle age class, and for rigorous preventive maintenance and overhaul.

In addition to Mr. Blewitt, President of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Company, other members of the board were L. H. Quackenbush, Vice-President of the State Marine Lines; and R. E. Gibson, Johns Hopkins University scientist.

B-52 Upgrading

Twenty-four SAC navigators have graduated from a B-52 upgrading program at Mather AFB, Calif. Purpose of the course is to instruct already highly experienced navigators in the ground trainer version of new bombing-navigation systems installed in B-52 aircraft.

Graduates of Class 59-3-B52 included Lt. Col. Hubert M. Hatley; Majors Calven P. Conrey, Ferdinand L. Goetz, Laurence L. Malone, and Robert C. Metz; Captains William K. Clarke, Carl A. Dossenbach, Paul W. Johnson, Kenard O. McClure, Joseph J. Mularz, Thomas J. Neal, Floyd M. Olson, Eugene Pile, and Bruce Robertson; First Lieutenants David L. Anderson, Winchell D. Chung, William A. Duck, Tayro R. Fujiwara, Max G. Owens, Billie F. Osburn, Louis S. Palmer, Carl G. Patterson, Claude E. Riggs, Jr., and Irby D. Terrell, Jr.

Three Mather permanent party officers, members of the 3535th Navigator Group, also were members of the class—Maj. Edward J. Kelly and Captains Daniel M. Carl and George H. Chabbott.

Maj. Carson Is Tyndall JAG

Maj. Robert W. Carson has been appointed Wing Staff Judge Advocate at Tyndall AFB, Fla. He replaces Lt. Col. Thomas B. Whelan, assigned to Air Defense Command, Ent AFB, Colo.

Major Carson came to Tyndall from Davis-Monthan AFB, Ariz.

First Lady Attends Benefit Luncheon

MRS. Dwight D. Eisenhower headed the list of honor guests at the annual benefit luncheon of Northern Virginia Chapter of Army Daughters. Mrs. J. S. Mintermute, 1st Vice President, presided in the absence of Mrs. Roscoe A. Barber, President, at Patton Hall, Fort Myer, on Wednesday, March 25.

Mrs. Eisenhower is shown above, holding the yellow spring bouquet just presented her, with her host, Mrs. Wintermute.

Highlighting the affair was a fashion parade of Army uniforms, dating from the Revolution to current Arctic protection clothing. The Third Infantry (Old Guard) modeled the uniforms, which were loaned by the Army Historical Division of the Quartermaster Museum, Fort Lee, Va. The U. S. Army Band played as the historically uniformed models paraded by.

Proceeds from the luncheon will go to the Eugenia Bradford Roberts Scholarship Fund—an educational fund to assist daughters of retired or deceased Army officers, and to the DeWitt Army Hospital at Fort Belvoir, for special items for the pediatrics ward not available through military funds.

Among the honor guests enjoying the uniform pageant with Mrs. Eisenhower were Mrs. Gerald E. Galloway, wife of the Commanding General, Fort Belvoir; Mrs. John H. Dudley, wife of the Deputy Commandant of the Engineer School, Fort Belvoir; Mrs. Kermit Davis, wife of the Commanding Officer, Fort Myer; Mrs. C. W. ## JOURNAL ENTRIES FOR SERVICE FAMILIES:

Million Refund Due Trailer Dwellers; Tell Gains In Capehart Housing Projects

Efforts of Mr. Edward K. Ryan of the Mather AFB, Calif., legal office are expected to mean more than a million dollars in refunds for military families who were taxed for their house trailers by the State of California during the period 11 September 1955 to 8 July 1958. A report from the Air Training Command, which will cite Mr. Ryan for his outstanding service, says that military people who paid trailer coach registration and license fees to California during this period may obtain refund applications by writing to the Department of Motor Vehicles, Attention: Unit No. 7 PO Box 319, Sacramento.

Ft. Sheridan, Ill., reports that bids are being advertised for 50 Capehart housing units. . . A $1.5 expansion and addition program for base housing at Lackland AFB, Tex., will be completed about the end of the year, with 40 officer and 42 airman units to be remodeled and renovated. . . At Fairchild AFB, Wash., more than 120 housing units have been remodeled, under supervision of Lt. Col. E. P. Anastasio, Project Officer. Families forced to move off the base during the rehabilitation period of 12-14 days received quarters allowance.

Mrs. Henry I. Hodes, wife of General Hodes, USA, who retired 31 March as Chief of U. S. Army Europe, was honored at a recent farewell tea by the Heidelberg German-American Women's Club. General and Mrs. Hodes expect to make their home in Texas.

A new children's school at Ft. Benning, Ga., has been named Loyd School in honor of 2d Lt. Frank R. Loyd, Jr., killed in action in Korea. He was the son of Colonel and Mrs. Loyd, USA-Ret., San Antonio, who participated in the 26 March dedication ceremonies.

AF Aid Society Helps More, Spends Less

Current restrictions on the Armed Forces Medicare program are expected to increase Air Force Aid Society loans and grants, according to the Society's 1958 Annual Report, just released.

After the Medicare program went into effect in 1956, the Report indicates, there was a significant decline in the medical cases handled by the Society.

Restrictions on Medicare which limit the types of care which can be received at Government expense, were imposed effective 1 October 1958.

Although the Air Force Aid Society helped 680 more people in 1958 than in 1957, the Report states, total assistance in the form of loans and grants decreased by $124,078.

Main reasons for this decrease are a decline in the Armed Forces Medicare Program and the absence of major storm disasters, which cost the society $68,000 in 1957.

Total assistance rendered by the Society during 1958 was $2,751,186, of which $2,426,519 was in loans and $324,667 in loans and grants written off.

During the year the Society assisted 29,345 Air Force families.

In 1958, the Society's General H. H. Arnold Educational Fund assisted 151 Air Force children in colleges and universities. Of these, 133 were helped for the entire school year with an average scholarship of $462.

The Society estimates that it can now assist 200 children a year under its educational fund.

Military Wives In Berlin Busy With "People Of Service" Projects Behind Iron Curtain

By MRS. BARKSDALE HAMLETT
(The following article was prepared by Mrs. Hamlett at the request of THE JOURNAL)

MOST of the Army women I have known have had the feeling that official matters and comments relating thereto are best left in the hands of their husbands. Today, in Berlin, we feel the same.

It is true that there is a great deal going on in the world today about which we would like to know more. There are a thousand questions we would like to have answered. We know, however, that asking would be a waste of time, so we go along, taking each day as it comes.

Our life, in this divided and isolated city, is full. One of our main problems is that there are only 24 hours in each day. There is so much to do, so many people to help, worthy projects to support, so much to see and to learn.

Courageous Children

There are "our" students, boys and girls who have taken their courage and lives in their hands and fled the East Zone in order to seek asylum in this shining city which is symbolic of freedom. These young people, in attempting to prepare themselves for a bright future, attend the Free University of Berlin. The school is not free in the monetary sense, but in that it exists in Free Berlin and operates free of thought control. As may be imagined, very few of these refugee students have the financial backing which would insure completion of their courses of study. The Berlin Senate underwrites students, but only for a given number of semesters. This then is where we, of the American Women's Club of Berlin, come into the picture.

In passing, it would be proper to describe our membership. Unlike most

MRS. HAMLETT, left, receives from Mrs. Robert J. Lawlor, President of the American Women's Club of Berlin, a check for $300 for the Army Distaff Club Foundation.

Service Women's Clubs, this has a catholic membership—wives of men in the Foreign Service, Navy, Air Force and civilian positions, as well as of news correspondents, Corps Diplomats, business and Army men. The latter includes commissioned and noncommissioned officers' wives.

It would be impossible for the Club to help all the students worthy of aid. Therefore, through a series of interviews, first established under the direction of Mrs. James B. Conant in 1955, a Club committee, headed by Mrs. Bernard Guffler, wife of the Honorable Bernard Guffler, Foreign Service Minister here, selects 10 or more students. Through Club aid these collegians are able to continue their work.

This year, led by the President, Mrs. R. J. Lawlor, and through prodigious efforts on the part of the Thrift Shop workers and other Club activities, we were not only able to provide for our usual number of students but to establish several scholarships at our other Berlin University, the Technical.

As every one who reads the papers knows, there are tens of thousands of refugees who flee to West Berlin from the East. These people arrive without worldly goods, and are taken in by the City Government and housed in refugee camps. In addition they must be clothed and given something to do while awaiting emigration to other regions. The flood of refugees sometimes is so great that serious problems exist, making it difficult to know what to do in order to help them. Many organizations help in this field and the American Women's Club plays only a small role.

However, we cast about and someone came up with the idea of supplying the women with yarns and knitting needles. This accomplished two missions at once. Not only would the women have something to do during the long, weary hours of waiting, but ultimately would have new garments for themselves or their children. Recently some of the refugees held a style show and it was amazing and heartwarming to see the clothes which had been fashioned.

Enlisted Wives Aid Projects

We of the American Women's Club do not stand nor operate alone. The Enlisted Men's Wives Club, headed by Mrs. C. O. Jowers, wife of Master Sergeant Jowers of Berlin Command, is a most active and enterprising group. The principal interest of this group lies in their work with the crippled children of the paraplegic ward in the Oskar-Helene Heim. This hospital is located within a block of the US Army installations.

Of the more than 100 patients in this particular ward, approximately 25 per cent are orphans or come from the East Sector of Berlin. Because of these circumstances these young patients are without financial backing. The City of Berlin underwrites the hospitalization, treatment and medical expenses, but someone must clothe these children and furnish a bit of entertainment. The Enlisted Men's Wives Club steps into the breach and supplies each needy child with three complete sets of clothing. In addition, games, books, and recently a

SPIELKISTE

A good way to get the children in on German-American relations, the American Women's Club of Berlin has found, is by its "Spielkiste," or Toybox.

By sponsoring a cartoon and puppet show for the youngsters of the Berlin American community, and fixing the admission at one toy each, the Berlin AWC gets out the boys and girls—and plenty of toys for the German Junior Red Cross, which takes care of the rest.

Six Spielkiste drives have been conducted by the Berlin AWC since its April 1952 opener. The 1958 chairman, Mrs. Howard G. Salisbury, told the American children that this is their opportunity "to select a toy or game from your own toy shelf, one which you think another child will enjoy."

The German children fill out "borrower cards," browse around and pick out the toys they would like. Each child who proves he or she can take good care of a borrowed toy is given one after a year's "good behavior" in the Spielkiste drive. The toys are disinfected before being loaned.

radio-victrola, have also been provided. In addition to the above-described work, Mrs. Jowers and her Club provide information and guidance to the young wives who come into Berlin; aid them in getting settled and lend needed supplies and equipment until such time as their household goods arrive.

Refugee Aid "Paramount"

Refugees are of paramount interest to the 6th Infantry Wives Club, whose President is Mrs. Keith Stewart. The efforts of these young women are directed toward alleviating hardship in some of the local refugee camps. Since the first of the year, more than 100 pairs of shoes and 20 large sacks of clothing have been collected, refurbished and distributed.

Easter was gay for some of the children in the camps because members of the 6th dyed, decorated and donated hundreds of eggs. Our own Army children have not been forgotten. Through courtesy of the Infantry wives, each child subjected to an immunization "shot," at the local Army Hospital, receives a lollipop. Eight hundred were distributed within the last three weeks.

Favorite flavor?—raspberry. Turning from frivolity, some of the younger Service people occasionally find themselves in distressing circumstances, in which cases the 6th takes care of its own, providing whatever aid is necessary in some family crises.

Moreover, only last week the 6th Wives sent into Washington a check for the Distaff Club.

AF Wives Help Orphans

The Tempelhof Air Force Wives' Club has a delightful means for raising funds to be spent on their favorite orphanage. Each year these women design and make the most fantastically complete child's wardrobe that ever set a child's eyes sparkling. A contest is held and the proceeds—usually in the neighborhood of four hundred dollars—are used

BERLIN SCHOLARSHIPS

A plan to furnish 8000 Deutsche Marks for ten scholarships to Berlin's Free University students, first conceived in 1957 by the Berlin American Women's Club, showed its first dividend this year when 11 scholarship winners were guests of honor at a tea given by Mrs. Bernard Gufier, wife of Minister Gufier and Honorary Vice-President of the Women's Club.

According to Mrs. Robert J. Lawlor, President of the AWC, the plan stipulated that half of the money awarded a student was to be considered a grant—with the balance to be repaid to the fund without interest. The money returned was to be used in a revolving fund for granting more scholarships in future years. This year marked the first time that an additional scholarship has been possible through repayment to the fund.

to supply clothing, fruit and needed equipment for an orphanage of 18 children.

The interests of the "Dependents" in Berlin do not entirely lie away from the American Community. There are dozens of wives and daughters who work in the Army Hospital, putting in hundreds of hours as Gray Ladies, staff assistants and nurses' aides. The Girl and Boy Scout programs as well as the American Youth Activities are strongly supported and subsidized by our Community.

Many of us have spent long hours studying the German language. These efforts have been well rewarded. Not only are we able to shop, sightsee, etc., auf Deutsch, but social intercourse with our German neighbors has been facilitated.

Recently at an International Woman's Group meeting (these are held monthly) a Yugoslavian, a German, an Armenian, a French woman and an American were seated at a tea table. The conversation was spirited, general, and all in German.

What About Free Time?

What do we do for fun and in our free time? We shop—oh those delightful antique shops on Keithstrasse—the gorgeous clothes to be seen along the "Ku-damm." We golf, swim and sail on the Wannsee when weather permits, and attend the opera. Wouldn't Verdi die to hear his arias sung in German? Berlin boasts one of the finest museums in Europe, one always encounters friends browsing through the exhibits. We play bridge, attend the local "Outpost" Theater, listen to lectures and generally do those things women do all over the world.

We go along day by day, doing that which needs doing. Sometimes this includes taking visitors to the East Sector of Berlin. There, one is brought face to face with our communist neighbors. A trip to East Berlin is a most impressive experience. There is the great tile facade of Stalinallee—built to show the West what the Red regime can do. It features enormous balconied buildings, one or two rooms deep, with rubble and ruin to the rear.

The few people one sees along the streets are warmly but unstylishly dressed. They do not look happy. Seldom does one see a smile. There is no ring of children's laughter while at play. It is a relief to get back to our side of the Brandenburg Gate. Here, the Berlin Bear is a benign sort of fellow who waves a friendly paw in welcome.

Life in Berlin is interesting, our husbands go about their duties, and we, the women, face each day with confidence and willing hearts.

Spring Styles Under Test At Edwards

Connie Henderson was Mistress of Ceremonies and program chairman. Special coiffures and professional makeup were provided by a local beauty shop.

Other women models appearing in the show were: Suzanne Benefield, Ginny Campbell, Diana Hostetler, Peggy Joeris, Janie Johnson, Barbara Nielsen and Donna Skyberg. Other officer models were: Lt. Col. George Kirsch, Maj. Jack Stutz, Capt. Sam Bass, Capt. Hank Gordon, and Lt. Hal Warnick. (Ironically, none of the ladies who modeled could get their own husbands to join them.)

Lockheed Names Former Naval Officer Chief Of New ASW Systems Organization

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation of Burbank, Calif., long-time specialists in building antisubmarine airplanes has created a high-level technical organization to find solutions to enemy submarine threats.

Lockheed President Courtland S. Gross said: "It would be rash to assume that the Russians are not now working on ballistic missile-launching, nuclear-powered submarines. If such weapons were or are to be available they could, unless detected, knock out a major portion of America's population and industry."

Designated LAWSO—for Lockheed Antisubmarine Warfare Systems Organization—the highly specialized group will work with the Navy in developing new techniques to neutralize the submarine menace. The agency will vary from 12 to 25 experts as specialized investigations are undertaken.

The LAWSO group, functioning as a part of the company's California Division, will direct the division's multi-faceted antisubmarine warfare (ASW) research and development program. It will operate under the over-all direction of Burt C.

Monesmith, Lockheed Vice President and Division General Manager.

Edward M. Davis, a former naval officer and for the past nine years chief of Lockheed's advanced ASW design projects, has been appointed LAWSO manager.

The LAWSO group also will call upon such Lockheed ASW experts as VADM. A. B. Vosseller, USN-(Ret.), Dr. J. E. Lipp, Dr. Lewis Larmore and Dr. Leon Aloglu. LAWSO will draw upon Lockheed's continuous experience in the antisubmarine field dating from the PV-1 Ventura of 1941. Other famed designs produced by the company include the PV-2 Harpoon which entered service in 1943 as the Navy's fastest low-level patrol bomber; the current world distance record-holding P2V Neptune series of which almost 1000 aircraft were produced; and the newest, the P3V-1 ASW hunter-killer which is now in prototype stages and has already undergone aerodynamic tests.

Lockheed has devoted almost a quarter-million man-hours to antisubmarine operations research.

Bell Receives AF Contract For Army Convertiplane; Lockheed JetStar Progress

Bell Helicopter Corporation received an extension to its Air Force contract for development of the Army's XV-3 convertiplane, President Harvey Gaylord, at Bell's Fort Worth, Tex., headquarters, noted that the XV-3 is first of the current group of Army-sponsored VTOL projects to receive flight evaluation by a government pilot.

Maj. Robert Ferry of Edwards AFB, Calif., earlier this year flew the convertiplane for 2.5 hours of preliminary evaluation, including three full conversions. The XV-3 is a tilting-rotor, fixed-wing type aircraft. Its rotors can lift the ship vertically on take off and then can be tilted forward 90 degrees, enabling it to fly horizontally in conventional airplane configuration.

The XV-3 made aviation history last 18 December near Fort Worth when it became the world's first aircraft of its kind to achieve 100% conversion. Bell Test Pilot Bill Quinlan was on that flight. Major Ferry later put the ship through the same maneuver.

Manufacture of production-model JetStar is getting into swing at Lockheed Aircraft Corporation's Georgia Division at Marietta.

The 600-mile-per-hour JetStar, developed in answer to an Air Force requirement for a jet trainer and utility transport, will be capable of training military personnel in an airplane with speeds comparable to those of jet combat planes.

The Air Force is expected to reach its decision this summer on the bombardier/navigator trainer configuration UCX plane.

Martin Gets Order For Mace Increase; Two New Navy Contracts To Grumman

The Air Materiel Command has awarded the Baltimore Division of The Martin Company a $2.4 million contract for expansion of the TM-76B Mace missile program. The surface-to-surface tactical missile is being test flown in a developmental program at Holloman AFB, N. M. The TM-76B uses an inertial guidance system, manufactured by the AC Spark Plug Division of General Motors, which is completely self-contained and invulnerable to enemy jamming. Highly accurate, the system permits the Mace to be flown over any course, including wide expanses of water. No terrain check points are necessary. The system compensates for changes in wind, temperature and barometric pressure, is not limited by foul weather or unusual climatic conditions.

A $101.7 million development and production contract for a new Navy jet attack plane, the A2F-1, has been awarded Grumman Aircraft Engineering Corporation, Bethpage, N. Y., following award of a $93 million contract to Grumman to develop and produce a new Navy early-warning airplane the W2F-1. The new contract is the first to be administered by the Navy under a new "cost-plus-incentive-fee" system which increases or decreases the contractor's profit on a basis of the aircraft's actual over-all performance, as well as on the contractor's control of costs.

Designed for high- and low-altitude operation, the carrier-based A2F-1 will be powered by two turbojet engines and will be manned by a crew of two. Further details concerning the airplane's design and performance are classified.

Lockheed Aircraft Corporation has reported to stockholders that sales of $962.6 million in 1958 set a new peak and that net earnings of $18.5 million were up 14%. Air Force planes, spares, and related work accounted for 32% of the total, Navy planes 11%, commercial planes 13%, military modernization and services 11%, and other governmental research and development 2%.

Chrysler Will Build New Army Tank; G-E Opens D.C. Defense Systems Office

THE Army before the end of May will contract for 180 new Diesel-powered 52-ton main battle tanks from the Newark, Del., plant of the Chrysler Corporation, to be produced as a continuation of M-48 work underway there. The M-60, which will replace the medium 53-ton M-48 and the heavy 60-ton M-103 tanks, will carry the new British-made 105mm gun "capable of defeating all armored vehicles known to exist." Future production plans of the M-60 beyond the initial order are not yet decided.

Powered by a Continental 750hp. engine, the M-60 will carry a crew of four, and will be capable of speeds of 32 mph with a range of 250 miles. The Army said that the new 105mm guns and Diesel engines can be installed in the M-48 when they are turned in for overhaul.

The General Electric Company has established a new office in Washington, D. C., for its Defense Systems Department and has named Charles D. Small, a former Air Force captain at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, to be its chief. . . . The Military Electronics Division of Motorola Inc. at Phoenix, has received a $3.8 million Air Force contract for 168 radar guidance beacons and command data links for the Boeing Bomarc missile, a continuation of existing production.

A WWII Air Transport Command pilot, Robert Kimble, has been named Manager of the Operations and Maintenance Department and Chief Pilot of Fairchild Aerial Surveys, Inc., Los Angeles, Calif.

Air Force letter contracts for more than $2.5 million have been awarded General Electric Company's Flight Propulsion Division in Cincinnati for production of J79 turbojet engines, slated for use in Convair's B-58 Hustler. . . . Magnetic Research Corporation of Hawthorne, Calif., has received a $109,800 contract from the Army's Ballistic Missile Agency at Huntsville, Ala., for D-C amplifiers. . . . Stromberg-Carlson Division of General Dynamics Corporation at Rochester, N. Y. has appointed Edward Diamon, formerly Associate General Counsel of the Atomic Energy Commission and a member of the WWII Manhattan Project, as Secretary and General Counsel.

Sec'y McElroy Hits "Onerous Restrictions" Imposed On Retired Officers In Industry

From first page— and thus able to influence his future service career?"

Secretary McElroy answered: "Anything that makes service in the military departments undesirable adversely affects the recruitment and retention of able individuals. Retired officers, like all former Government employees, labor under much more onerous restrictions regarding future employment than individuals who have not been employed by the Government.

"The implications of this question: (1) that a retired officer would seek to prejudice his active-duty friends against a junior officer who hasn't directed business to him and (2) that, if such an attempt to influence were made, the active duty officer would take any action against the interest of a subordinate, are not warranted on the basis of any facts available to the Department of Defense."

The Secretary said each of the Armed Services has extensive regulations dealing with the employment of retired officers by private concerns having contracts with the Department or with the military departments.

He said some of these directives relate to the retired officer personally and some relate to the activities of anyone, including retired officers, wishing to do business with the Government.

"There is now in preparation a proposed Department of Defense directive dealing with conflicts of interest," said Secretary McElroy. "The proposal is to require an affidavit of everyone seeking to do business with the Department of Defense."

Congressman Thomson noted that the present law prevents retired officers from representing any person in the sale of anything to the Government through the Department in whose service he holds a retired status. Noting that most retired officers are not employed in sales departments, but are officers of the corporation or administrators, he asked Secretary McElroy if, in his opinion, it is possible "to draw a clear-cut distinction between any corporation officer or position of policy formulating responsibilities, and the sales department, with the possible exception of the physical preparation and signature of contracts?"

Secretary McElroy said: "It does seem possible to separate administrative and sales positions. While, of course, all personnel of a company which is in business to sell products are in a sense involved in one way or another in 'selling,' the law does not prohibit employment with such a company, only 'selling' or 'procuring a claim.' It seems feasible to separate the forbidden from the permitted activities in that context.

"To suggest otherwise would be to impose a rule under which a retired officer would be barred from activities which, in appropriate cases, would (1) be the way in which the officer is best qualified by previous training to augment his retired pay, and (2) greatly benefit the Government."

Gen. Taylor Speaks

The Army has since Korea been reduced to 80,000 units of strength. The Army still has all the missions, except for the actual conduct of operations in Korea. This situation has left us with an obligation to maintain some 40,000 troops in Korea still tied down by that mission. From a political and military point of view, I cannot see how we can reduce our present overseas deployments at this time. As a matter of fact, a strength of 80,000 is proving inadequate to maintain our limited deployment, when one considers the numbers of Koreans and Europeans with whom, as I reported to you, we are now eking out our manpower commitments overseas. It seems to me that experience indicates we are finding that the strength of 80,000 is not optimum. We are getting it, but only by making some adjustments which I personally dislike very much."

Now USAA will insure your Valuables anywhere in the world

Pentagon Defers Action On DentiCare; Cites Need For Dental Assn. Approval

From first page—

recommendations of the Medicare Dental Advisory Committee, issued in July 1958. This Committee recommended a dental care program similar to the Medical Care program now provided for military families.

Under the program, families receiving care from civilian dentists would be required to pay an initial portion of the dentist's fee—probably up to $25—for each series of treatments. They would also have to assume the cost of special procedures, such as the provision of gold fillings, which are not normally required for satisfactory dental care.

Expressing his personal views, Dr. Berry said he is in favor of a dental care plan for military families. Dental care cannot be separated from the whole medical care concept, he said. "A patient

The Journal next week will feature a second report on DentiCare plans for the Armed Forces. It will detail the primary problems confronting Service dental officers in providing care for all members of Service families.

is an entity. When you talk about medical care you like to talk about care of that patient.

"I think it would have been a good idea," he said, "if the whole thing (both medical care and dental care legislation) could have been done at the same time. It would have been simpler that way."

The cost of dental care for military families as estimated by the Office of Dependents Medical Care, would be approximately $52 million per year. Of this total, Medicare officials say, only $29 million would have to be paid by the Government. The remainder would be paid by Service families themselves.

A final word of caution on the subject of dental care for military families was expressed by Dr. Berry. He noted that even after a dental care plan is approved by his office and by the American Dental Association, it would still have to secure the approval of Defense Department financial experts and the Bureau of the Budget before it could be submitted to Congress.

LEAVE MEDICARE ALONE

Nobody has given the Medicare program a chance to operate, in the opinion of Dr. Frank B. Berry, Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health and Medical.

As criticism of the Medicare program is being voiced from Capitol Hill and from some military circles, Dr. Berry cautions: "Try and let it run a little while without tinkering with it."

To gain the necessary experience and statistics on the program, he suggests that it continue under its present regulations for approximately two years. After that time, he noted, "I would think there would be a very good possibility of relaxing some of the restrictions under which the program is now operating."

Out-patient care for Service families is one area which may be liberalized after more Medicare experience is gained, Dr. Berry noted. He said that if out-patient charges are properly handled, there will be a saving in hospital charges.

One area in which he would like to see extended out-patient care, he said, is for acute emergencies, such as cuts, fractures and poisonings.

Don't Be Overcharged, Medicare Officials Warn

Officials of the Armed Forces Medicare program advise service families not to be overcharged when they receive authorized medical care from civilian physicians.

"A comparatively small number" of physicians, they note, have charged military families higher fees than are authorized in the program.

Reminding service families that Medicare is a "full service program," officials stress that military families need pay charges other than those authorized in the Medicare plan when they receive authorized care from civilian physicians.

In every case of overcharging by civilian physicians which was brought to the attention of the Medicare office, they say, all over-payments were refunded to the patients.

A survey is being conducted by the Office of Dependents Medical Care to determine the extent of overcharges currently being made.

Medicare officials say their warning applies only to medical treatment authorized in their program. Treatment covered by the program cannot be regulated by the military departments.

AF Col. Flanagan Receives Award At Nav. War College

Col. James L. Flanagan has been awarded the Air Force Commendation Medal for meritorious services during the period 1 June 1955 to 30 June 1958 as the U. S. Air Attache in Oslo, Norway. He is attending the senior officer course of instruction in Modern Warfare at the Naval War College, Newport, R. I. Upon completion he will be Commander of a SAC unit at McClellan AFB, Kans.

VAdm. Stuart H. Ingersoll, President, Naval War College, acting on behalf of the Department of the Air Force, delivered the award.

NAVY SELECTS RYAN C-W DOPPLER NAVIGATORS FOR MAJOR AIRCRAFT

Six major types of Navy aircraft will be equipped with Ryan continuous-wave Doppler navigation systems, the AN/APN-122 (V), under an initial $20-million contract awarded by the Navy to Ryan's Electronics Division. Ryan's automatic, all-weather, self-contained navigators will be installed in the Navy's Lockheed Neptunes (P2V), Martin Marlin patrol planes (P5M), carrier-based Douglas Sky Warriors (A3D), and three types of Grumman aircraft.

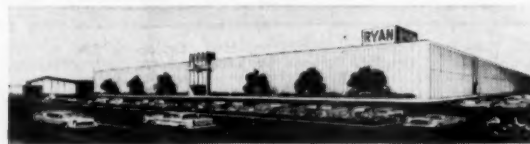

Developed in cooperation with the Navy, these advanced electronic systems are the lightest, simplest, most compact, and most reliable of their type. The new order, one of the largest of its kind, emphasizes Ryan's leadership in navigation and guidance systems.

With a solid backlog of this and other important contracts for RYANAV systems, the Ryan Electronics Division is growing even faster than this fastest growing industry. Personnel and facilities are being doubled, both in the new production plant at Torrance, Calif. and at the San Diego facility, where a modern new electronics research center is under construction.
